THE DRUNKARD'S DAUGHTER.

"We cannot find words to express our emotion when we first read the following touching verses. They stir the soul to its very depths, and we defy a man of feeling to read them with a tearless eye. A young lady, whose life had been made wretched by the drunkenness of her father, is the author; and none but one who has walked woe's depths' could write such a powerful piece. She wrote and sent it to a friend, who had told her that she was a 'monomania' in her hatred of the 'deadly cup.'"—[St. Louis Free.]

Go, feel what I have felt,
Go, bear what I have borne—
Sink 'neath the blow a father dealt—
And the cold proud world's scorn—
Thus struggle on from year to year,
Thy sole relief the tear.

Go, weep as I have wept,
O'er a loved father's fall,
See every cherished promise swept,
Youth's sweetness turned to gall;
Hope's faded flowers strewn all the way,
That led me up to woman's day.

Go, kneel as I have knelt,
Implore, beseech and pray—
Strive the besotted heart to melt,
The downward course to stay—
Be cast, with bitter tears, aside,
Thy prayers burlesqued, thy tears defied.

Go, stand where I have stood,
And see the strong man bow,
With gnashing teeth, his lips bathed in blood,
And cold the livid brow;
Go, catch his wandering glance, and see
There mirror'd his soul's misery.

Go, hear what I have heard,
The sobs of sad despair,
As memory's feeling fount hath stirr'd
And its revealing there
Have told him what he might have been
Had he the drunkard's fate foreseen.

Go, to my mother's side,
And her crushed spirit cheer,
Thine own deep anguish hide,
Wipe from her cheek the tear—
Mark her dimm'd eye, her furrow'd brow,
The gray that streaks her dark hair now,
Her toil-worn frame, her trembling limb,
And trace the ruin back to him
Whose plighted faith in early youth
Promised eternal love and truth—
But who, foresworn, hath yielded up
This promise to the deadly cup,
And led down from love and light,
From all that made her pathway bright,
And chained her there, 'mid want and strife,
That lowly thing, a Drunkard's Wife,
And stamp'd on childhood's brow so mild,
That withering blight, a Drunkard's Child.

Go, hear, and see, and feel, and know
All that my soul hath felt and known—
Then look upon the wine cup's glow,
See if its brightness can atone.
Think if its flavor you will try,
If all proclaimed—"'Tis drink and die!"

Tell me I hate the bowl!
Hate is a feeble word—
I loathe, abhor—my very soul
With strong disgust is stirr'd
Whene'er I see, or hear, or tell
Of that dark beverage of hell!

New Year's Seventy Years Ago.

When first President George Washington and his lady received their calls in New York, on New Year's day, 1790, the annals of that city preserve the following account of it:

"Gen. Washington, in the first year of his Presidency under the new Constitution, resided at the head of Cherry street. On New Year's day, 1790, he was waited upon by the principal gentlemen of the city. The day was uncommonly mild and pleasant. After being severally introduced and paying the usual compliments of the season, the citizens mutually interchanged their kind greeting and withdrew, highly gratified by the friendly notice of the President, to most of whom he was personally a stranger. In the evening Mrs. Washington held a levee. It was about full moon, and the air was so bland and serene that the ladies attended in their light summer shades. They were introduced by the aids and gentlemen in waiting, and after being seated, tea, coffee, plain and plum cake, were handed round.—Familiar and friendly conversation ensued, and kind inquiries, on the part of Mrs. Washington, after the families of the exiles with whom she had been acquainted during the revolutionary war. To a lady standing at the side of the President he remarked, 'Of all the incidents of the day, none has so pleased the General (by which title she always designated him) as the friendly greetings of the gentlemen who visited him at noon.'

"To the inquiry of the President whether it were casual or customary, he was assured that it was an annual custom, derived from our Dutch forefathers, which had always been commemorated. After a short pause, he observed: 'The highly favored situation of New York will, in process of years, gradually change its ancient customs and manners; but let whatever changes take place, never forget the cordial, cheerful observance of New Year's day.'"

CULTIVATION OF TOBACCO.

MR. EDITOR: I do not snuff, chew or smoke, or in any way use the fragrant weed; but millions do, and some of these consumers, in these stringent days, wish to become producers. For their illumination I will tell in a plain way, from actual knowledge, how to raise tobacco.

In the month of January or February the "plant bed" should be burned. Take a rich piece of ground, say twenty by thirty feet, and burn upon it a great many brush and poles, until all grass and weed seeds in it are certainly destroyed. Unless this is done the young plants, which are too thick on the ground to be weeded, will be choked and destroyed.—Dig up to the depth of six inches and thoroughly pulverize the ground; rake it smooth. Then take the seeds, mingled with dust or ashes, to prevent sowing too thick; then sow broadcast as you would turnip seed. Then roll, or tramp with the feet, the face of the bed until solid and smooth.—This presses the earth close about the minute seed, and insures their coming up. Now put on the bed a tolerably thick covering of clean brush from the tops of trees, laid on smooth, and so as to be conveniently removed when all danger of frost and cold winds have passed. Nothing more is to be done to the "plant bed."

Tobacco needs a rich soil.—Break up the ground by deep plowing; throw it into narrow beds about three and a half feet apart; then run a furrow across the bed, as when planting corn in checks; then take the hoes and make low, flat, well pulverized hills. This should not be done until the plants are about large enough to set out, else the hills will become grassy before the plants are set. This will not do, as it would necessitate working the ground before the plants have taken root.

When the plants are large enough to set out, the first "good season"—wetting rain—draw the plants as you would cabbage plants. Let one—a little boy can do it—take the plants and drop them on the hills, and let the setter have a short stick, some eight inches long, an inch and a quarter or half in diameter, sharpened at one end rather bluntly; stick this in the soft hill three or four inches deep, insert the plant, and press the earth closely about the roots.

After the plants have taken root cultivate the ground much as for corn or cabbage. When the plants have grown to a considerable height top them, so as to leave never more than ten leaves to mature; often only six or eight should be left to mature—that is, after allowing for pulling off such of the bottom leaves as are too near the ground. This is called "priming."

After the tobacco is topped it ought not to be plowed more than once, lest the leaves be torn and broken.

It is necessary to pass over the tobacco once every eight or ten days to pull off the suckers, in order that the whole growth and nourishment of the plants may go to the enrichment of the leaves. Especially is it necessary carefully to inspect each leaf, upper and lower side, to find and destroy the eggs, and little worms already hatched. They begin immediately on leaving the egg to eat the leaf, and if let alone would eat up every leaf.

Soon after the tobacco is topped it so spreads as to cover the ground, and prevents the growth of grass and weeds. As the plant approaches maturity the leaves assume a corrugated or wrinkled appearance, and a piebald, yellowish color. When ripe the leaves, when pinched between thumb and finger, crack open. Now take a strong sharp knife and split down the stalk to within four or five inches of where you cut it off, below all the leaves. Then turn the plant upside down, handling with care, for it is brittle and easily broken, and let it remain until wilted, and can be carried without breaking or bruising. Then take hold of the stalk and lay the plant on the shoulder until you have a load. Carry to the scaffold. The scaffold must consist of several stout poles, like a fodder-stack pole, for example. Lay one end on the fence and support the other by a couple of forks, about four feet from the ground, so that the leaves will not quite touch the ground. Before cutting you must prepare some hundreds of "tobacco sticks," according to your crop, made of ordinary board timber. Make them about three and a half feet long, and split about an inch, or a little less, in diameter. Plant two small forked sticks in the ground, some three and a half feet high. Lay a stick across; then take the plant, the stalk having already been split; smoothly divide and hang astride the stick, (don't crowd them,) some eight or ten plants on a stick. As these are filled place them on the scaffold. The tobacco should remain on the scaffold several days, unless there is rain; it should not get wet. Then place the tobacco on a wagon and haul to the barn. A regular tobacco barn is generally built thus: stout hewn or unhewn logs—some twenty or thirty feet square, with one broad low door. The cracks are closely boarded or daubed for some ten feet above the ground. Some ten feet from the ground the first series of joists or "tiers," placed about three feet apart; then another tier, some four feet above this. Where large crops are raised the barn is made thirty or forty feet high, with a steep pitched roof, and these tiers are continued up into the comb. The sticks with the tobacco on them are to be hoisted up, one man standing above another, with their feet on these tier poles, the ends of the sticks resting on the joists or tier poles. It must not be too much crowded for the air to circulate through and between the sticks.

There are two methods of curing. One is to hang the tobacco up and let it gradually dry until the stems are brittle. The other is to dig in the floor of the barn (always a dirt floor) several trenches, as if going to barbecue meat. In these kindle fires with green oak or hickory wood. These must be slow fires—much like smoking meat; as little blaze and as few sparks as possible, as there is great danger of burning the tobacco. When dry nothing is more combustible. Some one must watch these fires for fear of accident.

After the stems are perfectly cured—dry enough to snap—you have no more care about it, only to keep the house closed. When a good rain comes, and the tobacco is in "good case"—that is, moist and soft enough to handle, but not too moist, lest it should mould and rot—take down a stick at a time; have on some boards a bed of straw or hay; on this lay the tobacco stalks out, the leaves lapping over each other. When the "bulk" is made cover closely with straw, and put on a weight to keep the tobacco close and retain the moisture.

You can now strip it from the stalk whenever it suits you. Some careful person should first take the stalk and pick off the worm-eaten and inferior leaves, called "sorting." Then hand it to others to strip—tying from six to ten leaves in a "hand" or bunch.—These bunches or "hands," if in proper "case," may be bulked down again, or put on the sticks, until in proper "case" to be "prized" in the hogshead or cask.

I would remark, when you cut the tobacco and it wilts, don't let it burn with the sun. This kills it—makes it as dry and brittle as glass, and worthless as an oak leaf.

I have made tobacco—gone through all the processes, from the "plant bed" to the hogshead, where I have hitherto left it, and let it severely alone.

TEXAS CONFERENCE.

We insert an excellent letter from the editorial columns of the Texas Christian Advocate:

HOUSTON, Dec. 17, 1867.

On Saturday night we attended the anniversary of the Texas Conference Missionary Society. Though the collection raised failed to come up to the standard of other days, when the Conference was undivided and our people prosperous, yet it was by no means unfruitful of important results. The address of Bishop McTyeire, presenting clearly the condition and wants of our missionary work, will leave a permanent impression on the minds of both preachers and laymen who were present respecting the importance and magnitude of the field, and the necessity of increased activity in replenishing our impoverished treasury. Our old debt must be paid, and our brethren, who occupy posts of toil and honor, must not be recalled just as they begin to garner the ripening fruits of long years of patient labor.

On Sabbath morning the Bishop preached on the call to the ministry and its consequent obligations.—The feelings of curiosity with which we are wont to listen for the first time to a minister of acknowledged ability were forgotten as the preacher illustrated and enforced the nature and responsibilities of the ministerial vocation. When a sermon confronts a man with his own personal obligations to God, and discovers to him his shortcomings, he has something else to think about than style and manner. It is one of the highest achievements of the pulpit to so present the truths of God's word that the accidents which attend their utterance assume a subordinate relation in their presence. The sermon left on our mind the necessity of being a more faithful preacher and a better man. At the close of the sermon Edward A. Stecking and Ferdinand Mumme were ordained elders. At night, in the German church, William Meguire and Rudolph Behrends were ordained deacons.

The Conference adopted resolutions favoring the publication of a German paper and an edition of the Discipline in the German language; and recommended the transfer, by the Joint Publishing Committee, of the type and other material in their hands to Dr. J. C. Keener, in New Orleans. The action was both timely and important. Our German brethren need a church organ in their own language; and, from the vigorous manner they have taken hold of all our church enterprises, we have no doubt respecting the success of this important movement when fairly in operation.

The action of the Joint Board of Publication, with reference to proposals made by leading members of the church at Galveston, was announced in the report made by Dr. C. G. Young, Secretary of the Board, and met the unanimous approval of the Conference. The Bishop, who is well posted respecting the history of our church papers, pronounced the proposition the most liberal and generous that had ever come under his observation. It proposes to relieve the enterprise of the liabilities which have so long burdened it, and continue its publication on the sole condition that the church will furnish it sufficient patronage to cover its annual expense. Two thousand subscribers, at present rates, will accomplish this. As the patronage increases the paper is to be enlarged. If by the close of the present volume, in June, 1868, the subscription reaches thirty-five hundred paying subscribers, it will be changed to a quarto; and, in proportion to the increase of patronage, the size of the paper will be increased; when the subscription reaches 5,000 it will be enlarged to equal, in size and amount of reading matter, the largest paper now published in the interest of the Southern church, and at the same price. The action of the committee in providing for the enlargement and improvement of the Advocate, as its patronage increases, we consider wise. Texas, with its vast extent and growing population, should sustain one of the largest papers in the connection. Will our people respond to this generous proposal and furnish, by the last of June, the subscribers called for? The Sub-Publishing Committee was authorized to consummate the arrangement. We will have much more to say on the subject when it is perfected.

One of the pleasant incidents of the session was the introduction to the Conference, by the Bishop, of Rev. C. C. Gillespie, formerly editor of the Advocate. His remarks moved all hearts, and fully readjusted him in the affection of his brethren. His well known ability and marked force of character give promise of much usefulness in the church.

We regretted to witness the location of several of our best members. Moved, as they were, by convictions of duty as painful as they seemed imperative, we are sure that in their local relation they will do faithful service to the Church of Christ. We trust the way will soon be open for their return.

The appointments were read out at the close of the Tuesday morning's session; after some appropriate and impressive remarks by the Bishop, we parted for our several fields. The session was both pleasant and profitable. Kindly entertained by a generous people, we left their homes with regret, and will return with pleasure to spend with them another week of Conference labor at, we trust, no distant day.

The next session of the Conference will be held at Brenham.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The order of the President displacing Gen. Ord and Gen. Pope gives general satisfaction. We subjoin it:

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.

General Orders No. 101.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, Adjt-Genl's Office, Washington Dec. 28, 1867.

By direction of the President of the United States the following orders are made:

1. Gen. E. O. C. Ord will turn over his command of the Fourth Military District to Brevet Major-Gen. A. C. Gillem, and proceed to San Francisco, California, to command of the Department of California.

2. On being relieved by Brevet Major Gen. Ord, Brevet Major Gen. Irvin McDowell will proceed to Vicksburg, Mississippi, and relieve Gen. Gillem, in command of the Fourth Military District.

3. Brevet Major Gen. John Pope is hereby relieved of the command of the Third Military District, and will report, without delay, at the headquarters of the army for further orders, turning over his command to the next senior officer until the arrival of his successor.

4. Major General George G. Meade is assigned to the command of the Third Military District, and will assume it without delay. The Department of the East will be commanded by the senior officer now on duty in it until a commander is named by the President.

5. The officers assigned in the foregoing orders to command of military districts will exercise therein any and all powers conferred by acts of Congress upon district commanders, and also any and all powers pertaining to military department commanders.

6. Brevet Major Gen. Wager Swayne, Colonel 45th U. S. Infantry, is hereby relieved from duty in the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, and will proceed to Nashville, Tenn., and assume command of his regiment.

By command of Gen. Grant.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The friends of W. T. Smithson throughout the South will be interested in the following item:

A dispatch dated New York, Dec. 23d, gives the following:

The Herald special says the case of Smithson vs. Stanton, on a charge of false imprisonment, if it can be brought to test of an argument, promises to solve many of the doubts which surrounded the question as to the extent to which an official of the government has the power to seize the persons and property of individuals, without due process of law. Augher, Denver and Peck, of this city, having the case in hand, in March last made a motion in the District Court to require the defendant to furnish the originals of certain letters, papers and proceedings of courts-martial.

Mr. Stanton, notwithstanding, it is said, the readiness of his attorney to comply, has thus far obstinately refused the request to allow the originals to be seen, though copies are freely offered. The attorneys for the plaintiffs, however, are not willing to receive these, as they wish to discover the authenticity, particularly of the treasonable letters alleged to have been written under the assumed name of "Cables," by Smithson. These letters, as they appear in the pleas of the defendant, contain information respecting the garrison of Washington in the first year of the rebellion. Upon this ground Smithson was arrested and confined in Fort Lafayette.

After some time he was released, and afterward was again arrested and tried by a military court, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment at Albany, N. Y. After a brief confinement he was again set at liberty by a pardon by the President. During these occurrences, it is said that a government detective, upon an alleged authority from the Secretary of War, turned the wife and children of Smithson out of their house, which was occupied by officers of the government. The case thus far has been postponed out of courtesy to the opposite counsel.

But the attorneys for plaintiff have now determined to press their motion for Oyer and Inspection, and upon receiving an order from the court to the effect, civil process will be taken at once, either upon the merits of the case, or, in the event of a continued refusal, without giving sufficient legal reasons to produce the desired original letters, will move to set aside the justification set up by the defense, and for an order for contempt of court against Mr. Stanton.

The foreign dispatches show a continued uneasiness among the masses of Ireland:

LONDON, Dec. 29.—An unsuccessful Fenian attempt was made to burn the Dublin general postoffice with Greek fire. The attempt, however, failed.

The powder-mill at Feversham exploded. There were ten killed and many hurt. Cause of explosion unknown.

The Queen of Spain, in her speech before the Cortes, pledges the nation to support the Pope's temporal power.

The London Observer says that government will ask for new powers for the suppression of expected Fenianism.

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 29.—Cotton more active. Sales 10,000 bales. Prices unaltered.

Noon.—Cotton opened dull. Uplands 7¼d.; Orleans 7⅜d. Uplands, to arrive, 6⅝d.

PARIS, Dec. 29.—The Pope offers to pay the interest on the Italian bonds refused by Italy.

FLORENCE, Dec. 29.—There is much agitation in Piedmont and Naples. Garibaldi rising apprehended.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 29.—A Congress of Russian diplomats on the Eastern question is progressing here.

PARIS, Dec. 29.—Bourse heavy. Securities of all kinds weak. Rentes declined.

WASHINGTON, Dec 29.—Gen. Gillem recommends a special appropriation for the Mississippi destitute, and the establishment of depots for the distribution of provisions. Gen. Howard approves of the suggestion.

The January returns will show a decrease in the revenue.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Discussing the recent removals, the Tribune says:—The President successfully plays the game of political chess. The President removes every man who favors reconstruction under any other plan than his own. The game goes on, the President winning all the time; nor do we fail to see that the power which strengthens him is that of Gen. Grant. There is no use of concealing or avoiding this fact. Then Grant is an instrument in Mr. Johnson's will.

AN ITINERARY.

On the 17th of July last, in company with a supernumerary of the Montgomery Conference and a lay delegate from the Lowndesboro and Hayneville charge—Dr. J. M. Jennings and Hon. T. M. Williams—I started from Lowndesboro to go to Wetumpka, via Prattville, to attend the district meeting.

Sure enough we found a clear running stream, and with the addition of a pot of coffee from Aunt Dinah, who lived a short distance back, we enjoyed our repast—"Patulae recubantes sub tegmine fagi." Alas! that I should have to finish the quotation: "Nos patriae fines, et dulcia linquimus arva; nos patriam fugimus." But sad reflections meet us at every turn. Certainly that old man yonder is happy. Look at him, as he stands on the hill not far from his gate, with arms akimbo, with head enveloped in wreaths of smoke that curl up from his well-filled pipe, looking over his fields in the valley below that rustle with the promise of a fruitful harvest. Oh! is he not the picture of contentment? "Good evening, sir." A quiet nod. "Can we get a drink of water?" "Yes; drive round to the front gate and get down." We enter and find a little girl of eight summers with slate and pencil, drawing a "lady," and giving special attention to the "waterfall." A parrot sits upon the railing, evidently ruffled at the intrusion. Everything indicates peace and plenty. In comes a bucket of water, cool and dripping. We drink and bathe, pouring it upon our wrists, a la Dr. Clarke. Thus refreshed, we turn with much satisfaction to the delicious watermelon which the old gentleman has produced. Meantime we have been observing his face and speech and manner, to ascertain whether we could verify our hope of happiness in him. There is too sombre a cast about the brow; there are too many crow-feet about the eyes; there is too stern a contraction about the mouth. In addition to these inauspicious tokens, he assures us, viva voce, that we were mistaken. A deep shadow is upon his heart. Help, Lord! for the happy man ceaseth.

At Prattville part of the company repaired to the parsonage to claim the hospitality so warmly dispensed by the pastor, Rev. A. J. Briggs, while we enjoyed the kind entertainment of Rev. Hardie Brown.

From Prattville to Wetumpka we had a pleasant ride, and saw much water and a wilderness of pines; excellent pasturage, but few cattle. We encountered the second man that looked the picture of contentment. We are in search of a happy man. Seated on the end of one of the saw-mills which we passed was an old man in shirt sleeves and straw hat, with a fishing rod in his hand, and, I've no doubt, a delightful quid of the generous weed in his mouth.—There was just enough of mingled shade and sunshine in the place where he sat to make it inviting. There was a drowsy hum of insect life about him, and otherwise an almost unbroken stillness, except where, now and then, the whispering breeze would ripple the quiet water. There he sat, "the world forgetting, by the world forgot," too much absorbed in his occupation to notice us, and but for the occasional balancing of the rod, might have been adjudged a spectre fisherman. So blessedly serene was his look that we were strongly moved by an inclination to hug him, but a reluctance to disturb him prevailed, and we passed away, leaving him "alone in his glory."

Once or twice along the route we were pleasantly reminded of school-day and boyhood scenes.—We had to chide two of the brethren for lack of respect for such reminiscences, evinced by their failure to pull off their hats at the sight of a school house. Their offence was much aggravated by the fact that they had both been pedagogues. One of them afterwards tried to redeem himself by quoting liberally from Horace and Virgil, with discriminating comments and traditional renderings, but I could not forget that he neglected to uncover to the "spot where oft he had triumphed."

At Wetumpka we were greeted by Rev. C. D. Oliver. He was my pastor when I was a school boy, and then he impressed me for good. I thought he could get closer to boys, speak kindlier to them, and draw them toward him and the church more effectually than any preacher I knew. From the report of the spiritual condition of his charge this character follows him up. Many young men and women had recently been brought into the fold. He is certainly gifted in his approaches to the young, and he knows how to be "instant in season, out of season." I confess to a special satisfaction in the happiness of those who have contributed to my spiritual edification. I was delighted to meet his noble, intellectual wife again, and equally pleased to see his sons developing into honorable and promising manhood. Several times the proverbs of the wise men about children came into my mind in connection with this family.

Bishop Andrew was present—the dear old man. He had never attended a district meeting before, but he falls in very gracefully with improvements and modifications. He is no censorious stickler for old forms and obsolete usages. He is happy in the consciousness of having met the demands of his day and the responsibilities of his office in the fear of God. He rejoices that "in simplicity and Godly sincerity he has had his conversation in the world." By this rule he would measure his sons in the gospel. He has faith in them. He is confident that they will avoid envy and evil-mindedness; that they will be fortified against afflictions and persecutions; that they will give themselves devotedly to the work of the Lord. He has no fear but that God will take care of the church when he is removed. He is hopeful of the souls of men, hopeful of the church, hopeful of his younger brethren. It is animating to come into contact with his generous warmth, and to feel that he believes in you. Full of labors and of honors, he stands smiling among us, ready to reach out his hand when he shall be invited by his master to "come up higher." He talked much, but always well and wisely. His sayings were "treasured up in our hearts." On Sabbath he addressed the Sunday school, baptized a little daughter of the Rev. M. L. Lynch, deceased, and preached about the "dyed garments of Him who is mighty to save."

The business of the meeting was conducted promptly and systematically. The secretary was directed to furnish an abstract for the ADVOCATE. The religious exercises were refreshing. The singing was excellent, the praying was fervent, and the preaching was unctious. The love-feast was eminently the service of the occasion. It is delightful to have the church to preach to you as those brethren preached. The subjects discussed were resolvable into two propositions: The advantage of family religion, and the sanctification of suffering. These themes were illustrated with beauty and enforced with telling pathos. Simple informal sermons were pronounced, replete with "thoughts that breathed and words that burned."

CONTENTMENT is better than wealth.

LETTER FROM REV. YOUNG J. ALLEN.

MR. EDITOR:—I send you this, a letter from brother Allen of China, which I hope you will publish. I send it to you because it concerns chiefly the preachers of the Georgia Conference, though much of its contents ought to be considered by all the preachers in the Southern Methodist Church. Brother A. is an excellent missionary, and is rapidly growing in the esteem of both missionaries and the natives. Surely his own Conference has not forgotten him. Can the Georgia Conference allow such a man to suffer? The Foreign Board seems unable to do anything for the China Mission; it has sent but one small remittance this year. The Southern Baptist Board supports fifteen missionaries in Africa, and several in China. Cannot the Southern Methodist Church sustain one small mission in China? The Southern Baptist Board operates at home in the same territory with us—has to contend with the same difficulties, yet does ten times as much for its foreign missions as we do for ours. I know whereof I affirm. What is the matter with our Church?

I call your attention specially to what brother A. says as to the manner of taking up missionary collections. I indorse every word he utters. I have had the same experience. Our people will not give to an indefinite object, or contribute money to go they know not where. I also indorse what brother A. says in reference to support from a particular Conference. Every Conference in the Southern Methodist Church ought to support a missionary in some field. It is time we were improving in this matter.

W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM.

Abingdon, Va., Dec. 6, 1867.

MY DEAR BROTHER CUNNYNGHAM: Your letter just arrived in time for me to avail of the West Pacific mail to answer it. I wrote also by last mail via that route, in answer to your previously received letter. Though you were not indebted to me, be assured that I am always glad to hear from you, and will not slight any interest or attentions you may at any time favor me with. Indeed I am quite without any correspondents at home. They all seem to have forgotten me long ago, and even my own Conference has banished my name from its rolls and left me solitary and alone, perhaps living, perhaps dead, nobody seems to care. Under such circumstances I am often constrained to ask who knows of cares anything about the China Mission, for if the very laborers be soon forgotten and banished from the records by their friends, how can we expect their labors to be had in remembrance by the Church?

Brother Yates and I sometimes hold sad communion together on these and kindred subjects. We have both come to the conclusion that our mission work will never revive and prosper unless a different management obtain at home. His Board has a large mission in Africa of fifteen missionaries, a mission in Canton, one at Shanghai, and one in Fung Chow, yet they have been paid up the present year's salary, and are hopeful, while we are scarcely able to set one foot before the other, and our way is so dark that even these slow steps are rendered perilous. I am not only astonished, but shocked and almost disheartened, when I contemplate the spectacle of more than twenty conferences always resolving, but never supporting our poor feeble mission in China. There is woeful friction in our machinery somewhere, and I am inclined to think it lies in the Board. Our domestic and foreign missions until recently were combined and no doubt often confused, and even at the present, when they should be entirely separate and distinct, the collections are authorized to be taken together, and the confusion perpetuated. The people like to know, demand to know, and have a right to know, what becomes of their money. The Mission Board or those collecting for them assure the people that their contributions shall have the direction, and be appropriated as they specify—but they, the people, say it has not been done, and when I was authorized to lift collections before sailing for China, I met with that complaint everywhere; they would not, they said, contribute one cent to go into doubtful hands, but as I had been appointed to China, and they could pay it into my hands directly for the purposes of the mission there, they would do so cheerfully. I have seen general missionary collections taken where from a million to two million dollars were represented in the Church, and the enormous sum of nine dollars raised, and why? There must be an echo somewhere. At the very same place I raised collections amounting to more than a hundred dollars, which the people wished to force on me as a gift, lest the Missionary Treasurer should get hold of it, (but of course I was not in need, and would not accept, except in the name of the mission, to be reported at the proper time.) They insisted, however, that I should take it thus, and so paid it, but it was reported. Whether all these things have root and foundation or not, I cannot say. They think they have and act accordingly. My opinion is, that if the Board were to cast the burden of my support on the Georgia Conference, I should never want, and my work would never suffer such harrassing embarrassment in the future as it has in the past. The mission has never, as you yourself know only too well, been half supported, nor will it ever be in the future, unless a different policy obtain at home. At present I am far separated, by means of a distant Board, from my own Conference and all those who ought to be expected to remember me and my work in their prayers, and contribute for the support of the same. I am not alone in these views. Bro. Y. shares them heartily with me, and he even goes farther, and says that he would be willing to trust his support and that of his personal work to two or three individual churches who know him, rather than endure the doubts, anxieties and suspense consequent upon the office of the Board.

Let us be placed in vital contact with our people who know us and follow us in their prayers and have an interest in our work, and in my opinion, of twenty conferences, each could support as many and even more missionaries in China than all of them have done in the past; at least, it would not be extravagant to believe that each could and would be represented here or somewhere else very soon were such a plan adopted.

I believe that I have personal friends enough in Georgia who are not only able, even now, but would be willing to develop a hearty and liberal co-operation with me here and set up my personal work beyond the fatal contingencies of the past—and what is true in my case would be true in others.

I know that this is a delicate subject, and was once told by a member of the Board that it would not do to entertain it, but circumstances alter cases, and facts are not to be ignored.

By adopting such a plan and having my salary and other expenses forwarded directly by the Treasurer of my own Conference, the people, the church, would have an opportunity to know what I am doing and what is being done for me. They would soon learn that they were interested in the mission work of China, and that knowledge would not only do them good, but it would so identify them with the missionary as that he would never feel himself alone, but backed up and encouraged in his work.

I retrospect the past with shame and confusion of face, and am appalled at the thin and ghastly shadow that is now projected into the uncertain future of the China mission.

"If," as I said in a letter to the Nashville Advocate, "the China mission be an offspring of the church, begotten of the Holy Ghost, how shall it be bastardized and disowned." Are there no nursing mothers in Israel to take charge of this orphan, or shall it be left to pine and die, uncradled and unwept ——? But I will desist; my chains are galling me, but I must say, though a prisoner, I thank God I am in the prison of hope and not of despair. Hence I comfort myself and wait in patience the decision of the counsellors. YOUNG J. ALLEN.

THE PASSOVER.

When the nation was established in its own home, the observance underwent some change, and the hurried meal became an elaborate ritual. One innovation was (and it was expressly sanctioned, Deut. xvi. 5, 6) that the lamb was no longer slain in every private home, but on the spot consecrated by the presence of the tabernacle. Nor was this all; for while the head of the Paschal Company was, as before, to slay the lamb with his own hand, the whole service now became intimately connected with the altar and the priesthood. The following account,* gathered from the Jewish writings, places the scene very graphically before us. On the appointed day, and about the hour of sunset, the Israelites brought their lambs upon their shoulders to the temple gates, within which they were admitted in three separate divisions. When the first entered the gates were closed, and the trumpets of the temple (the sonorous bell swinging on its hinges being a much later invention) sounded three times. We should always bear in mind that in the Israelite sacrificial service everything was conducted with the most studied method, and the vast body of officiating ministers were trained to execute skilfully every detail of their office (which might otherwise suggest to the imagination some features rather repulsive) with the utmost precision, dispatch, and cleanliness.† We shall realize this especially in the case before us. The priests stood in two rows, extending from the altar to the place where the people and the lambs were stationed, those of one row holding basins of silver, and those of the other basins of gold. Each Israelite then slew his lamb in order, the attendant officials making this doubtless a very simple operation for the most unpractised hand. The priest nearest to him received the blood in his basin, which he handed to the next priest, who gave his empty basin in return. A succession of full basins was thus passed toward the altar, and a succession of empty ones towards the people, and the priest who stood next the altar poured out the blood toward the base. The lambs themselves underwent a proper dressing; the skins were taken off, the insides taken out, washed, and replaced, but the internal fat was reserved to be burnt on the altar in the evening with incense; and while all this was going forward the temple choirs sung that collection of the Psalms (cxiii.—cxviii.) called the Hallel, a word (of which Hallelujah is the fuller form) signifying praise. It celebrated the mercy of God, dwelling on high and yet humbling himself to the earth; the glorious departure of Israel from their bondage; the cup of salvation was mentioned with thankfulness, and the rejected stone was declared head of the corner. The second division was then admitted to the court, and the same observance was repeated. As it grew dark the assembly retired home, each man bearing his lamb, and the temple courts were carefully cleaned.

We here see the sacrificial idea of the Passover more distinctly brought out. The blood was no longer sprinkled on the door-posts, but on God's altar, the secret of safety being thus more clearly seen to be atonement. Nor is it possible to conceive a more imposing affirmation than this scene presents of the mystical significance of blood, when we see it treated, not as a thing to be decently got rid of, but as a sacred sign, to be waited on with long arrays of gold and silver, and handled with religious attention by consecrated men.

On being introduced to the Paschal meal at the separate homes, we find that changes have there also been introduced. The guests, in general between ten and twenty in number,‡ and usually all males, are no longer standing, but following the usual custom of meals—sitting or reclining on couches. The whole meal was more elaborate and ceremonious.§ It was also accompanied with the novelty of wine, and no less than four cups were drunk at the various stages with appropriate formalities. The first was introductory, and before anything was placed on the table, the master pronouncing a form of thanks for the fruit of the vine, and for that good day and the sanctification of Israel. The bitter herbs were then set on board and partaken of. Next the unleavened bread was handed round, probably in the form of thin biscuits. It was only now that the lamb, roasted and entire as of old, was brought in; but before it was eaten a second cup was filled, and one of the sons of the family (as suggested by Exod. xii. 26) inquired of the father or master, "What mean ye by this service?" The head replied by a narration of the sufferings of the Israelites in Egypt, and their Divine deliverance. The first part of the Hallel, bearing especially on the Exodus (Ps. cxiii., cxiv.,) was then sung, and the lamb was carved and eaten. A third cup of wine was now poured out and drunk; the Cup of Blessing it was called, because with it they blessed God and gave thanks. This was followed by the fourth cup and singing the remainder of the Hallel (Ps. cxv.—cxviii.,) which concluded the ceremony.

How Baron Rothschild Succeeded.

We yesterday dined at the Ham House to meet the Rothschilds, and very amusing it was. He (Rothschild) told us his life and adventures. He was the third son of the banker at Frankfort. "There was not," he said, "room enough for us all in that city. I dealt in English goods. One great trader came there who had the market to himself; he was quite a great man, and did us a favor if he sold us goods.

"Somehow I offended him, and he refused to show us his patterns.—This was on Tuesday. I said to my father, 'I will go to England.' I could speak nothing but German. On Thursday I started. The nearer I got to England the cheaper goods were. As soon as I got to Manchester I laid out all my money, things were so cheap, and I made a good profit. I soon found that there were three profits—the raw material, the dyeing, and the manufacturing. I said to the manufacturer, 'I will supply you with the material and dye, and you supply me with the manufactured goods.' So I got three profits instead of one, and I could sell goods cheaper than anybody. In a short time I made my £20,000 into £60,000.

"My success all turned on one maxim. I said, 'I can do what another man can, and so I am a match for the man with the patterns, and all the rest of them!' Another advantage I had. I was an off-hand man; I made a bargain at once.—When I was settled in London the East India Company had £800,000 of gold to sell. I went to the sale and bought it all. I knew the duke of Wellington must have it for the pay of his army in the peninsula; I had bought a great many of his bills at a discount. The government sent for me, and said they must have it. When they got it they did not know how to get it to Portugal. I undertook all that, and I sent it through France, and that was the best business I ever did."

Another maxim, on which he seemed to place great reliance, was never to have anything to do with an unlucky place or an unlucky man. "I have seen," said he "many clever men who had no shoes to their feet! I never act with them. Their advice sound very well, but fate is against them they cannot get on themselves; and if they cannot do good to themselves how can they do good to me? By aid of these maxims he has acquired three millions of money.

"I hope," said ——, "that your children are not too fond of money and business, to the exclusion of more important things. I am sure you would not wish that?"

"I am sure I should wish that I wish them to give mind and soul and heart and body and everything to business. This is the way to be happy. It requires a great deal of boldness and a great deal of caution to make a large fortune, and when you have got it, it requires ten times as much wit to keep it. If I were to listen to all the projects proposed to me I should ruin myself very soon. Stick to one business, young man," said he to Edward, "stick to your brewery, and you may be the great brewer of London. Be a brewer and a banker and a merchant and a manufacturer, and you will soon be in the Gazette.—One of my neighbors is a very ill-tempered man; he tries to vex me and has built a great place for swine close to my walk. So when I go out I hear first grunt, grunt, squeak, squeak; but this does me no harm; I am always in good humor."—English Correspondence, 1834.

THE CONTRAST.—When Joseph Sutcliff was near his last hour, he said: "I have been thinking of the difference between the death of Paul and of Byron. Paul said, 'The time of my departure is at hand,' but there is laid up for me a crown.' Byron said:

"My days are in the yellow leaf,
The flower, the fruit of life is gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone."

WHEN a man desires to sleep, he desires to hear no noise; so when a man doth desire to sleep in sin, he desires not to hear the voice of grace disturbing him; and the devil, like a diligent chamberlain, draweth the curtains of darkness and security around him.—W. Fenner.

THE supply of American cotton to England this year has been 5 per cent. beyond that of last year, while the quantity from India has experienced a reduction of 29 per cent.

We Challenge the State.

Last week we expressed our thanks for the big box from San Jose. This week we received a long box from Russian river. On opening it we found—well, listen and we will tell you what we found. First, a lot of sweet potatoes, one of which was a yard long! Second, a beautiful lot of pop-corn, the sight of which made the young Spectator's eyes sparkle with delight. Third, huge ears of Indian corn, the sight of which gave us such a home feeling that we fondled them like old friends. Fourth, some Irish potatoes, which, but for their color, might have been mistaken for small pumpkins! The Spectator owns the longest potato in California. We challenge the State.

The long box was from our esteemed friend and brother, S. J. Wilhoit, who resides near Healdsburg. He need not think of emigrating. He can command everything at home to live on, and to live well, too.

P. S.—We have the long potato to show to our friends, lest they should think we are "drawing a long bow." The others don't keep well with us. We like them.—San Francisco Spectator.

SCIENCE IN SCHOOLS.

Physical science, taught earnestly and vigorously in some such way as this, would, we repeat, show the seeds of that vigilance and sincerity of mind which are more especially the fruits of actual original research. There are boys of certain types on whom it would have a particularly powerful and salutary effect. In every school are to be found many lads who for want of proper training pass their days in dull heaviness of mind.—They are often well-behaved boys, regular in eating and drinking, in playing and learning, but never diligent. They do their lessons, but never study; they appear only half awake; they have eyes, and yet they see not. You show them a landscape, and they seem to remember it only as a green blotch of trees and fields. An engine at work, a fine building, an incident in the street, everything in fact leaves on their brain a dim and misty picture. They seem to walk in a world of which the image is out of focus, and where everything is blurred and indistinct. These boys the master pronounces dull; they are his despair, and, though some of them suddenly wake up in after life, the majority remain dull to the end. They are not, however, hopeless—ought not to be thought of as without the pale of training. It is through the bluntness of their senses that they fall, and it is by working upon their senses that they can be put right. They will not, however, be found to profit by strange sights and startling sounds, by being woke up in order to fall asleep again. What they need is a kind of training which consists in continually shaking them by the shoulder, and saying, "Look, look!" They must be repeatedly roused, until they have learnt to keep awake. They must have lessons, which they cannot only half do, which they cannot slur sleepily over, which they must set about with wide eyes and open ears, or not do at all. In fact, they want just such lessons as physical science only can furnish. A larger, more dangerous, and less hopeful class is formed by boys, before whose eyes there is a very distinct and yet an unreal world. Their senses are active enough, but the impressions which reach their brain from without run riot, being governed by no judgment. If they attempt to describe a scene, an incident, or a person, they paint a picture in which they disguise the reality, almost past recognition, with features of their own imagining; and this not so much because they are careless, as because they have no dominant sense of truth. To such as these (at least in their youth) the world appears not in the form of a solid rock of stern rigidity and frameness, but as a waving image in which lights and shadows come and go as their fancy wills; though ever ready to sacrifice sober truth for the sake of what they call poetry, their fickle and spoilt minds are insensible to the grandeur of Nature, and they cannot hear the solemn music of the universe for the noise of the tinkling of their own-cymbals. These are they who, in after life, often without intending it, commit grievous wrongs, breeding and fostering errors on all sides, and leaving a trail of uncertainty and illusion wherever they go. It is just simply and plainly the salvation of such boys to have brought them in early life into close and personal contact with Nature.—Daily trials in the laboratory would teach them, as nothing else could, that behind the seeming fickleness of the phenomena of the world there lies hidden an unchangeableness of law which can be neither ignored nor withstood, an objective reality before which, in the end, all subjective fancies must bow. They would learn first to recognize, then to respect, and finally to love, the quickitude, the patience, the unerring straightforwardness and painful exactitude of Nature's ways; they would find out that she is to be overcome only by obedience and ruled only by following in her steps. Little by little their minds would be brought to feel not only that there is such a thing as truth, and that it is within the grasp of man, but also that by it alone the value of things can be measured. Another large class of persons are habitually inaccurate and untruthful through mere carelessness and indolence. They have no intention of saying what is not true, but are too readily contented with something "near the truth." They say that such and such an event took place, when they really mean that they think it did. They are too lazy to take the trouble to look, and afterwards too lazy to make an effort to recollect what they have seen; and, after a while, they grow into a state of mind in which facts and opinions are lamentably mixed together. Out of this class come those honest witnesses who flatly contradict each other on matters of fact which need no special intelligence either to observe or to report upon. Nor is this a fault by any means confined entirely to the uneducated classes. The whole world suffers injury daily by reason of people of all ranks, quite free from malice prepense, who, in the first place, will not see, and, in the second place, have no lively sense of truthfulness. And they are hardly to blame, for they have for the most part never been trained to see. Neither classics nor mathematics have the power of teaching the student the difficult art of accurate observation: such a power belongs to the physical and natural sciences only. It is, in fact, their unquestionable prerogative, by virtue of which they claim to have a share in the moulding of the minds of the young.

No solid gain, however, can with reason be looked for while the teaching of science continues to occupy in our schools its present ignominious position. So long as science is allowed to rank hardly higher than fencing or dancing, and a little lower than French or German, it is simply absurd to imagine that it can ever have any real effect on the learner's mind. As mere useful knowledge, it might very justly be prevented from encroaching on the time allotted to more rigorous duties, and as a sort of pleasant make-believe study it might seem peculiarly adapted to be taught on half-holidays and at other odd times; but if it is worth teaching at all, it is worth teaching with seriousness and energy, and if any real good is to be expected from the study of it, it must be publicly recognized as having equal honor with the oldest branches of learning. Sudden and extensive changes work perhaps even more evil in schools, especially in public schools, than in any other institutions; and it would be neither desirable nor practicable at once to elevate the teaching of science to its rightful position; but it ought to be borne in mind that it claims to have allotted to it, sooner or later—and the sooner the better—no less than the same time, the same honor, the same emoluments, and the same amount of teaching power, that are now bestowed on classics and on mathematics. The benefits which a boy derives from any particular study are largely affected by the estcem in which he sees it to be held in his school; if science is not allowed to share in the prestige which belongs to classics—if the best boys in the science classes are not reckoned with their classical and mathematical peers as the élite of the school—the teaching of science will be robbed of half its power. If it continues to be thought unnecessary to have distinct science masters—if the classical or mathematical master is allowed to "take" the science classes in addition to his own, or if the science masters do not take equal rank with the highest of the teachers—it cannot be expected that boys, with the social feelings of schools so strong as they are, will throw themselves with zeal into what appears to them to be only a second-rate study. On the other hand, the fear which has been expressed in some quarters that these dangerous rivals, the sciences, would prove too strong for the oldest studies if they were placed on the same footing with them, and that the light of classical learning would be quenched by a flood of utilitarian knowledge, though complimentary to the strength of science, is hardly just either to the tendencies of scientific studies or to the intrinsic worth of classical learning. Very much nearer the truth would it be to say that the teaching of both classics and mathematics would receive help and support by the introduction of physical science. Of the educational value of mathematical training this is not the place to speak; but it is a matter of everyday experience that the mathematics lack one thing. Admirably rigid and exact—peculiarly potent in accustoming the mind to clear conceptions and accurate reasoning—they lose half their hold on most boys, just because they are so absolutely rigid and exact that a great gap seems fixed between their operations and the flexible uncertain occupations of ordinary life. That gap is filled up by the experimental sciences; for they, while exact enough under one aspect, have another side which, by its uncertainties and its tentative methods of inquiry, establishes a common ground between themselves and human life.

A pernicious doctrine, gaining far too much credence, teaches that there is a sort of antagonism between mathematical and classical studies, and that the boys who do well in the one cannot be expected to succeed in the other. A natural corollary to this proposition is supplied by saying that experimental science is the natural enemy of both. Of course a boy who shows a marked fondness for any particular kind of learning is likely to excel in it, and it is only right that he should be encouraged to do so; but it needs very little experience of schools to become convinced that, as a general rule, the best boys are best in all the studies of the schools, unless their minds have been purposely turned by the master in one particular direction.—Natural science having hitherto been deemed by schoolmasters a study fit for outcasts only, it cannot be wondered at that boys who felt a fondness for science should have found, or imagined that they found, no aptitude in themselves for other studies. If, however, all three branches of learning were placed on the same footing, the study of science would be at least a help rather than an obstacle to the others. The student of experimental physics would at once feel the necessity of a slight, and the immense advantage of a considerable, amount of mathematical training; while it would become the master's urgent duty, and at the same time his easy task, to see that the boys were not so engrossed in the study of natural phenomena as to lose all thought and care of purely human matters. Even the present feeble beginnings of science-teaching have already shown that it is quite a false fear to suppose that the planting of one kind of knowledge is injurious to others. Of the least one of our great public schools where science has been introduced, it is reported that "the masters have no wish to return to the old regime," and "that the school is all the better for the innovation, and classical studies are none the worse." Men wedded to old ways could hardly as yet be expected to say more.

In thus considering the teaching of science almost solely in reference to the training of the mind, it must not be forgotten that its subject-matter is, after all, useful knowledge. And useless as useful knowledge may justly be thought for ordinary school purposes, and useless as it often proves in actual life through want of intelligent power to use it, it must not be forgotten that the value of it in untrained, unaccustomed hands, is no measure of what it may become when wielded by persons whose minds have been formed and developed by practice in the use of it. Even at the present day, urgent scientific practical questions meet us on every hand, and science in its progress is fast wrapping itself so closely round our individual lives, and intertwining itself so thoroughly into our national existence, that it seems almost impossible to exaggerate the importance of giving our cultivated and educated classes such a general training as shall enable them to form sound judgments on matters belonging to experimental and natural science. Still more urgent even is the duty of providing for the classes which are not called cultivated, for our industrial masses, that scientific training, and store of scientific and technical knowledge, which are daily becoming more and more the very means of life to so many of them. And here science seems to offer the solution of a difficulty already felt and likely before long to assume very dangerous proportions. The trouble and vexation which the masters of our great public schools have met with in attempting to carry on, by the side of a high and classical school, a low and ignominious school, where useful knowledge only is taught, has been felt only in other places than in those villages which have had the good or bad fortune to have received the gift of a public school. Almost in every town and district may be found the same difficulty between the classical school and what is technically called "commercial" education. Perhaps at the present day the tendency is for the middle and lower classes to flock the middle class and commercial schools, to fill their empty benches with "gentlefolk's" sons. It would be a great and serious evil, it would be even a national disaster, if in the future the youth of England were to be brought up under different systems of education, their minds moulded in different ways, according as they belonged to one stratum of society or another. It would be bad both for the intellectual and for the material interests of the country—bad for art and science, and bad for culture—if learning, instead of being one, as of old, were cut into different patterns for different pockets, and if boys, according as their fathers were gentlemen, tradesmen, or artisans, were told off to high schools, where each was taught to despise what the other was taught to admire. Happily it is simply impossible that such a state of things should ever come to pass. Intellectual power never fails to make itself felt through any thickness of social difference, and the influence of culture flows in circles that widen without limit. Whatever the son of the peer be taught, sooner or later there will come a cry for the son of the poor man to learn it too. Even already, those who found most fault with the high schools are beginning to proclaim the commercial schools a failure. Our middle classes, in truth, hardly know what they want. They have discarded Greek, because it was of no use in business; they have tried the commercial school, and they find it wanting; their boys learn to write good hands and to do enormous sums, but they come home a lacking something, the possession of which makes the high-school boys their indisputable masters. With all their getting of useful knowledge, they have failed to get mental training, which is greater than penmanship and arithmetic. And many wise fathers, anxious to bring up "business" sons, prefer, in spite of the Greek, to send their boys to the high school, rather than to the private academy, where useful knowledge is rendered useless in the teaching. To all such as these the establishment of high schools of science would be welcome as water in the desert. Equally welcome and far more profitable would be the generous introduction of science into all our schools, high and low. Under the system we have endeavored to advocate, Greek would lose all its terrors, and useful knowledge would fall back again to its proper place. There need, then, be no more than one kind of school and one method of teaching for all kinds and conditions of men. A boy's career would no longer be settled for life by the stamp of the school into which his father had put him, but, learning becoming again, as of old, one and indivisible, school life would be once more to the clever boys the gate of success. Teaching everywhere would be of the same quality, though measured out in varied quantity and degree, according to the learner's station in life. The artisan might find an initial and yet sound education, that would enable him to gain a double good from subsequent technical training; the tradesman might see his son led into the same paths of learning as his superiors in social position, and at the same time drilled to habits of thought and temper mysteriously and yet admirably fitted for a business life; while the rich and cultivated would not only find their power multiplied a hundredfold, but would see opening up paths of culture as yet for the most part undreamt of by them.

SPAIN.—"Irenaeus," of the New York Observer, in one of his recent foreign letters says: "At the present moment there is as little religious toleration in Spain as in the days when Popery was most fearfully alive and Cardinal Ximenes undertook to convert all heretics by means of the faggot and fire. There are Bibles in Spain, but there are no Bibles in circulation. Several thousand sent over by the British and Foreign Bible Society have been seized by government, and are now lying in boxes in a cellar, to be sent back or destroyed. All attempts to spread the light of Divine Truth, through any other than the channels of the Church of Rome, are prohibited, and it is a high crime against the law, or the royal will, which is the highest law in Spain, to preach or distribute religious books. This puts an end to all colportage and to evangelical effort of every kind. The Queen is the most religious of all queens, but her religion is after the pattern of Saul, not of Paul.

"We went after church to the old Palace of the Inquisition. It is now converted into dwellings. Over the main entrance was the inscription, common all over these foreign countries, as in some parts of our own, "Insured Against Fire." The poor victims who in former years were dragged under that portal would have been glad to read such words, if they could be interpreted into an assurance that they were to be safe from the fire of an auto da fe. The Spanish Inquisition affords the saddest story in the annals of the human race."

REVOLTING DISCOVERIES IN THE CITY OF MEXICO.—A correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune writes as follows from the city of Mexico, under date of October 1st: A company of Frenchmen are engaged on a very singular enterprise in this city, which partakes very much of the character of the "Martha's Vineyard" search after hidden treasure. The parties spoken of have purchased the old convent St. Domingo, and are at work excavating tunnels beneath the same, hunting for treasure supposed to have been put in secret vaults, said to exist there, by the Catholic priests some years ago. They have already made the discovery of an underground passage leading from the convent to the massive pile of buildings known as the "Inquisition," standing on the opposite side of the street. Several bodies have been exhumed already, which bear the appearance of having been buried alive.

They have thus far been found inclosed in the walls. One was in a perfect state of preservation, and had the appearance of having been a man of rank. His clothes even were richly embroidered in gold. The priests of the city are greatly annoyed at these revelations, and have made many efforts to stop them.

CHINA.

IMPERIAL ORDER CONCERNING CHRISTIANITY.—The following State paper is found in the Missionary Recorder, for September, published at Foochow. It was issued five years ago, has been recently translated for the Recorder, has been the basis of action ever since its publication. The importance of the document will be recognized still more when it is known that in our treaty these words are found: "Protestantism, also called Romanism." The following order, therefore, applies as much to Christianity as to Romanism:

Prince Kung, by Imperial will, President of the Board, hereby issues an order:

The 13th Article of the French treaty, agreed to and signed at Tientsin in the eighth year of Heen Fung (1858), secures "to all Chinese who wish of their own will to embrace the religion of the Lord of Heaven, and to follow its practices, a perfect freedom from persecution and penalty;" and again, "whatever has before been promulgated against its propagation, either in manuscript or in print, is hereby abrogated throughout the Empire." In accordance with this treaty, the Prince has already instructed the provincial authorities to carry into full effect the articles of the treaty of the tenth years of Heen Fung (1858 and 1860) in their entirety, as well as to expose the same to public view. But, in addition thereto, the Prince has, on the second day of the eleventh moon of the present year, received an Imperial Decree as follows:—"Hereafter, when there arise disputes affecting Christian converts, the local authorities must thoroughly investigate their origin, and deal with them justly. If Christians fulfill their part as becomes good citizens, regulate their conduct, and have respect for themselves, they are among the children of China, and must, as a matter of course, be protected, and as tenderly cared for as those who are not of this religion. They are not to be oppressed on the ground of their profession of Christianity. The local authorities must be just in each and every matter, and treat it with discrimination, thereby showing that it is the earnest will of the Government to protect and nourish the good and the upright. Respect this!"

REV. WILLIAM ARTHUR, at a recent large meeting attended by more than a hundred Wesleyan ministers, delivered a practical address on the best method of increasing the missionary contributions of the home branch societies. He showed that while the income from foreign stations had gradually increased, the income from home sources for years past had been almost stationary, and this notwithstanding the growing numbers and wealth of our societies and congregations. He further stated that while nearly forty per cent. of the annual income is derived from public collections, not more than twenty-three per cent. comes through the medium of collectors, and three per cent. from juvenile associations. He strongly advocated, where practicable, the mapping out of circuits into districts, and the appointment of earnest and willing lady collectors, who will faithfully discharge their duties in the face of wind or rain or snow, and at any cost of personal convenience, from a sense of love and obligation, "presenting themselves a living sacrifice" in the service of Christ and for the good of souls; also the formation of juvenile associations on the "Blake" system, (including both home and foreign missions,) and with the strictest observance of the letter of the rules. The importance of engaging the young was forcibly urged, and the value of these associations as training schools for our young people, and especially as a means of linking their hearts to the mission work by a bond that shall strengthen with the lapse of years. He laid great stress upon the importance of securing in every circuit a good lay secretary, who should not only keep the machinery in order, but see to the active working of its details.

GEN. BEAUREGARD has arranged for the application of a patented electric brake to the cars of the New Orleans, Jackson, and Great Northern Railroad, of which he is president. This brake is a French invention now in successful use abroad. It is manipulated by the engineer.

A broken and contrite heart unlocks our inward senses, and makes us see, and hear, and feel the things which could no more be seen, heard, or felt before, than a man in a deep sleep can hear, and see, and the things that are said and done about him.

"I never complained of my condition but once," said an old man, "when my feet were bare and I had no money to buy shoes; but I met a man without feet, and became contented."

MILITARY ORDERS.

Revocation of Orders—Appointment of Coroner.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DIST., New Orleans, La., Dec. 19, 1867.
Special Orders No. 214.

3. So much of special orders Nos. 191 and 192, current series, from these headquarters, issued by Brevet Major Gen. Mower, as directs the removal from office of Paul E. Theard, fourth district court; R. C. Bond, clerk fourth district court; W. Woelper, clerk sixth district court; P. W. Collens, Third Justice of the Peace; D. C. Byerly, Clerk Third district court, all in the parish of Orleans, and Thomas Askew, State Tax Collector, first district; R. M. Lusher, Superintendent of Public Education; H. H. Hardy, Secretary of State; and Henry Bensel, State Tax Collector, Fourth District, and appoints in their places J. P. Boyd, William L. Randall, H. C. Caulkins, Eugene Staes, John B. Carter, John L. Davis, J. R. G. Pitkin, John McNair, and George W. Kendall, is hereby revoked.

The evidence submitted does not sustain the allegations contained in said orders of removal.

4. So much of paragraph 4, Special Orders No. 192, current series, from these headquarters, issued by Brevet Major Gen. Mower, removing from office Charles Delery, Coroner of the parish of Orleans, Louisiana, (which order was suspended by paragraph 5, Special Orders No. 193, from these headquarters,) will be carried into effect. So much of said order appointing W. H. Hire to fill the vacancy is revoked. Thos. Bradford is hereby appointed Coroner of the parish of Orleans, Louisiana.

6. Upon the recommendation of his excellency Gov. Flanders, the following appointments are announced to fill existing vacancies:

Rosamond Hebert, to be Justice of the Peace, third ward, parish of West Baton Rouge, La.

E. S. Pipes, to be Justice of the Peace, twelfth ward of Union parish, La.

F. E. Trudeau, to be Police Juror, eleventh ward, parish of West Baton Rouge, La.

Geo. C. Benham, to be Justice of the Peace, second ward, parish of Carroll, La.

12. So much of Special Orders No. 176, current series, from these headquarters, issued by Brevet Major Gen. Mower, as directs the removal of Geo. H. Branghn from the office of Second Justice of the Peace, parish of Orleans, will be carried into effect. Upon an examination of the evidence submitted in this case, the allegation of malfeasance in office, upon which the removal was made, is not sustained.

That portion of the above order appointing W. F. McLean, Second Justice of the Peace, parish of Orleans, is revoked, and Paris Childress is hereby appointed in his place.

By command of Major General Hancock;
GEO. L. HARTSUFF,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Statistics of Intoxication.

Dr. Caffe devotes, in the Journal des Connoissance Medicales, an interesting article to this curious subject. Every nation has its peculiar intoxicating drug. Siberia has its fungus; Turkey, India, and China have their opium; Persia, India, Turkey, and Africa from Morocco down to the Cape of Good Hope, and even the Indians of Brazil, have their hemp and hachish; India, China, and the Eastern Archipelago have their betel and betel pepper; the islands of the Pacific have their daily hava; Pern and Bolivia their eternal coca; New Grenada and the chains of the Himalaya their red thorny apple; Asia, America, and the whole world perhaps patronize tobacco; the English and Germans have hops; and the French have lettuce. Of all these drugs tobacco is that which claims sovereignty over the largest portion of the human race, for its votaries are stated at 900 millions; opium fortunately does not boast more than 400 millions; but hachish, a drug quite as intoxicating as opium, is commonly indulged in by 300 millions of people. Betel, which, in point of fact, is hardly more than a gentle stimulant, extends its sway over about 100 millions. Coca, the virtues of which have scarcely been sufficiently studied except by Professor Mantegazza, of Milan, can barely muster ten millions of people; and all the other drugs taken together, including the Ilex Vomitoria of Florida, are used by about 25 millions of the human race.

HAPPINESS AND VIRTUE.—Happiness and virtue are twins, which can never be divided; they are born and flourish, or sicken and die together. They are offsprings of good sense and innocence; and while they continue under the guidance of such parents they are invulnerable to injury, and incapable of decay!

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

TO OUR AGENTS.

We have as much money outstanding in the hands of agents as we can at present afford. We are therefore compelled to adhere to the policy of putting down the subscriber's name only when accompanied with the money.

What are bees that make no honey?
Send a letter with the money.
Names are good, but money better;
Send the money in the letter.
Send the letter and the money;
What we want is honey, honey.

CHANGE OF POST OFFICE.

The preachers will greatly oblige us by giving immediate notice of any change in their address.

TOBACCO.

Our readers will find a treatise upon the cultivation of this wonderful weed in this week's ADVOCATE, by the Rev. Dr. Walker. Fortunate it is that he does not belong to the North Ohio Conference. He would have to make many confessions, promises of amendment, besides eating an enormous quantity of codfish, if those brethren had the handling of his case. He wrote it by request. A letter from the country asks for the information, because the planters of the South must hereafter cultivate many kinds of crops, instead of risking all upon cotton.

WE OMITTED last week to credit the Nashville Christian Advocate with the fine tribute published to the memory of the Rev. Alexander Sale.

THE OLD YEAR—AND THE NEW.

The anchor is weighed. The old year, with its full freight, stands boldly out; every sail is set, and under a strong wind it swiftly gains the horizon. As those who bid farewell to departing friends, we stand upon the shore and watch with tearful gaze its receding lines. We now return to the solitary chamber, and there call up those faces and forms which have gone, it may be, forever, and hear those sweet voices which still linger among the galleries of sound.

When we consider the exalted worth, the noble nature, the pure grace, the strength, and the wisdom of those who have passed away with the year, earth seems poorer, much poorer, than it was. Nor does it seem possible that so much of goodness could be parted with without soon impoverishing the world. If each successive period of time has borne away an equal portion of good, how immeasurable must the wealth be of that region which receives, year by year, these untold treasures!

This forward movement of the universe would seem presently to leave nothing behind. All appears to be made for the future. The very planets permit no rest, but in their swift haste arouse mortals at every watch, to make ready for the final journey. There is evidently no abiding place here. At every new year the pillar of cloud lifts itself from the Tabernacle, and gives the signal for us to strike our tents and prepare for another march. And as we follow that divine symbol which floats before and beckons on along the wilderness of earth, we lean forward "toward the mark for the prize of the high calling," and picture the happy end of all life's toil:

"A land of corn, and wine, and oil,
Favored with God's peculiar smile,
With every blessing blest."

All the symptoms of advancing life we can well afford to contemplate. The failing sight, the flowering almond, the unsteady step, the trembling hand, only tell us that we are nearing our home.

Each year lessens by so much the great battle and brings us closer to the victory of Christ. The saints on earth, with the saints in light, and the saints "under the altar," await the final glory, and see with infinite desire the approach of every new year. By and by the "fulness of time" will again come, when the revelation of the KING will establish forever the victory of the SON. But the experience of the past bids the soul furbish up its armor, and prepare for the events of the already announced eighteen hundred and sixty-eight. The long months of another year are to be encountered; trials such as we have past, or greater, are waiting for us in its impenetrable shades. How encouraging to know that every conflict of this life is but an episode of the great epic which now transpires in the presence of the general assembly of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven; in which the Son of God opposes against the adversary and all powers of darkness, whether in earth or Hades, all the weight of his truth and righteousness, and all the brightness of his own person. As He moves, attended by thronging hosts of mighty Angels, upon those invisible fields, so upon this broad earth the good are everywhere engaged upon the same side against the embattled strength of Gog and Magog. "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." For, "who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the son of God?"

The soul thus by faith passes from the old year to the new without pain, as one standing upon a mountain in the regions of the far North sees the point where the sun, descending in glory, only touches the horizon, and then, without passing into night, suddenly assumes the robes of the morning and wheels upward to rekindle the vault with unfailing day. And how certainly does the light of the blessed Saviour dispel the gloom which oppresses the last hours of the old year. Memories, however sad, vanish in the clear shining of the Christian's hope. Time bears him forward on its swift current towards an eternal youth. The morning is ever before him, not the night. His heart dwells upon Him who is without age, "who is the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever." The golden chain of time lessens, link by link, with every dying year, and draws earth that much nearer to heaven. At each approach the eye of faith, searching for some familiar face, scans the myriads which crowd those happy shores.

"How long the way?
The eye of Faith looks through the mystic veil
And sees the gates of pearl; Hope's list'ning ear
Drinks in the music of angello choirs;
Tho when, or where, the touch of death may fall
No whisper'd warning tells: the march of life
Leads only to to-day! But, as the lark
Shakes off the night and greets the rising sun
With glorious song, so we, as seasons pass,
May calmly view the length'ning train, and say:
'So many years from earth!' may live, love, work,
That, as our feet glide by, life's last white stone
Shall flash with graven lines of living light—
'Earth lies behind, and yonder opens Heaven!'"

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE HOME ALTAR, by Charles F. Deems, D. D., New York: Hurd & Houghton, 459 Broome street, 1868. We have often recommended this book to the families of our people. To all who wish to set up an altar at home and seek aid to overcome the embarrassments incident to inexperience we commend this little volume. It sweeps away all the ordinary excuses for neglect of an important duty. For sale by J. A. Gresham, 92 Camp street.

THE HOME MONTHLY, for December, presents the following attractive table of contents: Confederate Notes, Moral Teachings of Christ, Fictitious Literature, My Arrest, An Unusual Case, Maud Hinton, Summer Retreat of a Southern Planter, Erle Berties' Essays. Poetry: Married and Ruined, Recognition, Only a Day, Sonnet—The Valley. This number contains an educational department. It deserves to have its subscription list doubled. For sale by R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street—$3 a year.

JAMES A. GRESHAM, No. 92 Camp street, has placed upon our table the January numbers of the Land we Love and the Riverside Magazine.

Mr. Gresham has the most attractive book store in town. He has displayed much taste in the selection of his stock. We do not know a better place to buy a Christmas present, or to obtain the best publications of the day, gotten up in the most attractive style. He deserves success, and doubtless has already attained it.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE.

BY WM. F. SAMFORD, LL. D.

INTRODUCTION.

MR. EDITOR: I have been requested to appeal to the preachers of the Montgomery Conference in behalf of this institution, through your ADVOCATE. I beg to respectfully decline that office. It is not my mission to appeal to preachers. They ought to appeal to me. If they do not understand their work, I shall not undertake to illuminate them. Besides, I have not so great confidence in preachers as some people that I wot of seem to have. They appeal to them for everything. Preachers are not omnipotent. They are now required to do more things than Cæsar ever did well. They are expected to preach the word, attend prayer meetings, hold class-meetings, administer the Discipline, peddle books, act as agents for newspapers, schools and charities of all sorts, make collections, promote the temperance cause, keep the missionary machine going, organize and superintend Sabbath schools, visit the brethren, reprove the disorderly, warn the lukewarm, see after the widows and orphans, attend the feasts of the rich and the funerals of the poor, bury the dead, marry the living, baptize children and converts, attend protracted meetings, get up revivals, confirm the wavering, instruct the ignorant, be sight to the blind, ears for the deaf, feet for the lame, carry consolation to the bereaved, encourage the faint, comfort and guide the dying, and do all this daily and hourly, in season and out of season—diem de die—from the day of their consecration to the articulo mortis!

No, I shall not appeal to the preachers. Giants there are among them, but Titanic strength is not equal to their tasks. The education of the church and people is not primarily their work. There is neither geometry nor astrology, physics nor metaphysics in their commission. The gospel is not written in block letter nor belles-lettres, nor defined by astronomical lines, nor geological periods. I shall not ask men who are replenishing the fountains of exhausted life, trimming the astral lamps of immortality among the tombs, and arranging and arraying the sacramental hosts for the battlefields of time or the grand review, eternity, to furl their consecrated banners at the altars of human learning. No, no! Let them preach the word!—the mighty word of the mighty God—to the perishing people! Let them shake the nations! Let them stand upon the mountains, (how "beautiful are their feet,") proclaiming the heavenly peace to a sinful world. Let them take their celestial courses among the stars, illuminating the islands and continents, bathing their glowing pinions in the sun, shining and singing as they fly through all lands, bearing "glad tidings of great joy" to the sorrowful children of earth. No, no, no! I do not appeal to the preachers. My God and the God of my father! put a different unction upon them. It is not letters we want from their hallowed lips. Bread! bread! "the bread of life" for the starving millions!

What then? Do I depreciate learning? Nay, verily! Has the church no interest in her literary institutions? An interest very vast of the utmost moment, not yet approached to the dim outline of its grand proportions; scarcely comprehended in the alphabet of its significance by the statesmanship of the church. I do not therefore appeal to the people of the church. They do not appreciate the momentous character of that interest, and it requires transcendent abilities to instruct the ignorant and arouse the sleeping sensibilities of the slumbering multitude. "I speak as unto wise men. Judge ye what I say," I lift up a dim signal, afar off, for the telescopic eye. Great men learn quite as much from the humble, as they do from philosophers and savans. I desire to appeal to the thinking men of the church, the earnest men, the working men—to men whose hearts have not been so eaten up by the gross materialism of the age and times that they do yet retain in their memory and consciousness a faint impression that they have souls; whose brains are not so torporized by the distraction of the hour; whose nerves are not so crowded by selfish cares that they have forgotten to believe there is a God and eternity; to men whose eyes are not so riveted upon impending calamities that they do verily despair of Christian destinies. To thee, "O Theophilus," of all that the "people called Methodists" "began both to do and teach" in their earlier apostolic age, do I venture to write—of that time when "the Lord was among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place," and "the chariots of God" were "twenty thousand, even many thousands of angels."

I do not at all propose an orderly discussion of a thesis, nor yet a very careful arrangement of the conditions of an hypothesis. Still less is it any part of my design to affect the theurgic art. Self-evident proposition, plain logic, admitted facts, scraps of history, gossip, touches of biography, anecdotes, affecting memories of the past, spontaneous appeals, all intended to be instructive, affording useful hints to the wise, and it may be random hits at the foolish, and arranged in the beautiful disorder of the forest, with its hills and valleys, its waterfalls and fountains, its rocks, its flowers and buzzing insect life, with its birds and its echoes, with its waving banners of green and its wasting trunks, its grand old primeval aisles, its lights and shadows, its sunshine and storm, its floating clouds and fantoccini.

So much have I said for the benefit of the critics—a sort of people of whom I have a great horror. Whenever I attempt to write anything that aspires to be sensible and useful, seeing that they have unsparingly abused whatever I have written that is meritorious, and as incontinently praised whatever is trivial or unmeaning. Among these terrible people I can imagine myself and my co-laborers with the pen, like the poor Dervishes in the gloomy wilderness around the ancient Shushan, among "the lions, hyenas and beasts of prey," from which they take shelter in the tomb of Daniel. And of all other critics, I have quite the greatest horror of your ignorant, superlative saints, who adhere with devout superstition to Mr. Wesley's denunciation of "newspapers!" and the good Baxter's deprecation of "the reading of vain books, play books, romances and feigned histories." These, without discrimination, they still hold to be "devil's books," "false bewitching stories, and the seducting books of false teachers." They forget that St. Paul read the Greek "poets," and applied them to purpose. Let it not be thought that I suspect their piety or would depreciate their zeal. In both these cardinal points they are exemplary, and there is much truth in their superstition. They are sacrificing with all devotion to "the unknown God." And "right here," as your Methodist preachers delight to say, the church needs the discrimination and the enterprise which nothing can give but her literary institutions. Here is the field upon which the world, the vain, wicked, infidel, sensual world has chosen to fight Christianity; that world which St. John tells us so often, and with such emphasis, that we must overcome it. From the strictly scientific departments of human knowledge, infidelity has been essentially driven by the giants of the three last centuries. The evil tendencies of the age (and good physicians always watch tendencies) are to be detected in the speculations of "artistic atheism," as developed in the "ethical learning" of that literature which is the priest of social anarchy and the prophet of a moral chaos. It is no longer that the knights of a scriptural orthodoxy are demanded in defense of theoremic truth, or the textuary skill of the dialectician is wanted in the demonstration of problematic credo-ism. What the church needs is literary power to combat these evil tendencies. There is more divinity, and the savor of a brighter and better spiritual life in the novels of Miss Augusta Evans than in nine-tenths of the sermons and theological texts published in the last half century, and javelined all over and all through, "like the man in the almanac," with firstlies and fiftiethlies! I have great reverence for our "authorities," whatever they may be, in these days of democratic innovation and laity-legislation, in things spiritual. I put off my sandals, worn with many pilgrimages, in order to ascend the mount of their sacred fame. In the sublime heights where they dwell, wrapped by the clouds, away from vulgar vision, where the voices of our prayerful communion shall wake no echoes in the valleys below, but ascend to heaven. I appeal to the wise men of the church if the time has not come to cultivate a literature? I humbly desire to know of such men as Bishops Paine, Pierce, Marvin, McTyeire, and Drs. Summers, Keener, Myers, and their associates, whether we can longer afford simply not to read the literature of the age? Is it likely we can induce the children of the church, as Dante says, to "look and pass on?" Who is it that is to combat the influence of such writers as Miss Braddon and George Eliot? Take away DeQuincey, and who fountain of English "undefiled" to purify the cesspool of contemporary literature—what he calls "the literature of power in opposition to the literature of mere science teaching?" Who is to bridle the wild Pegassus of Carlyle? Shall it be the scriptural reproach of the church that Tom Moore has a richer melody than the Psalmists? that Byron must be read to comprehend the power of English poetry? Is it not a legitimate aspiration that the church should roll out from the depths of her great nebulous beds orbs of transcendent magnitude and glory — eternal fixed stars, to eclipse these blazing meteors of ungodly literature?

But this is a scene "aside" in the play I have taken in hand. The education of the children of the church, in the colleges of the church by the faithful friends and the best workers of the church, is the mighty theme— the EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE is my text! What sort of a sermon I may preach depends on many circumstances, the very important one of which will be the sort of audience I may have.

THE HILLS, near Auburn,
Lee County, Alabama.

A war has now been raging nearly three years between Brazil and Paraguay, and many thousand lives have been lost in consequence. The latest intelligence from the seat of war is that the army of Paraguay, under Lopez, assumed the offensive on the 1st inst., attacked the Brazilian camp, and put 2,500 men hors de combat. The Brazilians are heavily tired of the war, in which they have lost prestige as well as men.

The movement of the various divisions of the Russian army toward has been completed, and the government is now in a position to send 203,000 men to the Turkish and Austrian frontier at a few days' notice. 45,000 men are stationed between Dunaburg, Polotsk and Witebsk; 20,000 at Brizov and Orza; 18,000 at Minsk; 50,000 in other parts of Lithuania; and 70,000 at Teheringov, Zytomir, Kiev and Ostrog.

The entire cost of the military establishment of Britain is £15,000,000 sterling per annum. This includes the 210,000 native troops in India, but does not include the comparatively trifling sum which is expended in the maintenance of the militia and volunteers.

FLORENCE, Dec. 17.—Prime Minister Menabrea replied yesterday to the attacks made upon the government by the liberal party in Parliament. In the course of his speech he said that Italy would sooner or later possess Rome, but that this would be accomplished not by force, but by moral force. Baron Ricasoli followed in a speech in opposition to the chief minister, saying that the popular vote in Naples and other cities of Italy showed that the population demanded a different pol-

OBITUARIES.

Died, on the 2d of November, 1867 HIRAM PATRICK, of Wilcox county, Alabama. Mr. Patrick was born in the State of Mississippi on the 15th of September, 1811, and moved to Alabama when young. He never attached himself to any church, but lived a moral life and did much for the prosperity of the church. Prior to his illness he was serious, and seemed at times to be much interested about his salvation. Some two weeks before his death he was attacked with something like cholera morbus, which caused inflamation of the bowels, and terminated in his death. He believed from the first that he would not recover, and became earnest in prayer until he found peace and pardon, which was the most remarkable ever witnessed in this country, and his dying testimony in favor of Christianity the most convincing that could be used. He left a wife and five children, for whom he seemed much concerned, to mourn his loss. Otherwise he was perfectly happy, tranquil, and submissive to the will of God, desiring, if anything, to depart and be with Jesus. After his conversion his spirit wandered in a vision to the better land, of which he gave a glowing account. Here he saw his mother, his children, in a state of sweet happy bliss. He spoke much of what he saw and felt while in this state. He consoled his family by telling them of the great goodness of God, and that he felt that a person might so live here as not to feel the sting of death, and that the apparent terrors of death had all vanished or changed into sweetness and bliss; that he would soon sleep in Jesus. He told them that God conducted him safely, and would also be their protector and guide. He did not want them to grieve for him, nor to weep over his grave, but to be bold soldiers.

He was grieved over his deliaquency in duty, and his unprofitable life; said there was much yet for him to do, and if permitted to live he would be more useful, but if he died, he indulged the hope that his dying testimony would live after him, to counsel the living; wanted to go to church once more to tell the people his feelings, and warn them. Said there was too much selfishness and not enough brotherly love in the churches, and that the ministers were too indifferent; said to me: "When you preach, tell the people there is a God that can save sinners." He died without pain, in a calm, sweet sleep and rest in Jesus. L. M. BETHEA.

Died, in New Orleans, of cholera, on the 19th of November, 1867, ALEXANDER G. MORSE.

The deceased, son of Henry Morse and Eliza White Vick, was born in Vicksburg, Mississippi, on the 27th day of August, 1836.

At the commencement of the late war he enlisted in the Confederate army for one year, serving with honor, enduring privation and exposure with soldier-like patience, whether with the Crescent Rifles or with Feaner's Battery, in joining which he enlisted for the war. He never flinched from his duty.

Marrying Miss Amanda F. Dortch, of Mississippi, at the close of his first term, he again went forth, not to come back until the war was over.

In this service he contracted the disease which, afterwards culminating in cholera, caused his death.

Returning eventually to New Orleans, his old employer gave him his former position, which he filled faithfully to his death.

A most devoted husband and father, a warm-hearted brother, clinging in his affection on those whom he loved so truly, in great and sore poverty and privation he toiled unceasingly, till he ceased to work, when he ceased to live.

His domestic life with his noble-hearted companion, to whom he left the sad legacy of three interesting young children, was very happy.

Some months previous to his death he with his partner, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, uniting with the McGehee Church.

The night previous to his death he was singing for his children "Napoleon's Grave," little reeking that soon "he would sleep his last sleep," and "had fought his last battle."

At 10 o'clock P. M. of the 19th the call came, and he literally slept into death. Around that couch were wife, friend, brother, and his aged mother, to whom in all his hours of adversity he fled for rest, for consolation. "A mother's love is the holiest thing alive." Christ hath promised that those who confess Him on earth, them will he confess before his Father and his holy angels.

Thus, dear brother, though we no longer see thy kindling glance, nor sing with thee "Mary at the Saviour's Tomb," or "Rest for the Weary," yet in Christ we humbly have to meet again in the better land.

"Our sweetest joys here vanish all,
And fade like hues at even;
Our brightest hopes like meteors fall—
There are no tears in Heaven.

"The mourner sad, who drowned in grief,
Hath long in sorrow striven,
Shall find at last a sweet relief—
Tears wiped away in Heaven.

"Then God, our joy and rest shall be,
And sorrow far be driven;
And sin and death forever flee—
There are no tears in Heaven." H.

At his residence, in Amite county, Mississippi, departed this life, Mr. MATTHEW RAMSEY, on Friday morning, December 20th, aged 75 years and nine months.

Mr. Ramsey emigrated to Mississippi in the year 1825, from the State of South Carolina.

He was a successful planter, and secured for himself and his only daughter, Mrs. Col. R. A. Stewart, an abundance of this world's wealth. He cared but little for anything except this world until a few years ago, when the triumphant death of his wife led him to repentance, and to the feeling of an earnest desire for like precious faith. He was converted we trust, joined the Methodist Church South, and evinced the reality of the change in him by a change in his views, acts, and aims.

There was a teachableness, a desire for the conversation of Christians, in him which emboldens us to hope that he is now with that Saviour who loved and redeemed him from sin. J. W.

Departed this life, in Sabine county, Texas, November 5, 1867, Mrs. ANNA M. BALLARD, wife of Carroll Ballard, and only daughter of J. L. and H. K. Sweet, in the nineteenth year of her age. Stricken down in the bloom of life, her pure and blameless soul has returned to its God.

"A sinner saved, through grace forgiven,
Redeemed from earth, to reign in heaven;
Crowned through the mercy of her Lord,
With a free, full, immense reward."

THE BEST ARE THE CHEAPEST.

THE MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS have just been awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the Grand Exposition in Paris, in competition with instruments from the best makers of all countries. This makes over seventy highest premiums awarded them within a few years. Testimonials from more than three hundred of the most prominent musicians in the country that these instruments are unequalled are published in the circulars of Mason & Hamlin.

Observe that dealers in musical instruments are strongly tempted to recommend as equal to the best, those instruments on which they can make the largest profit. The prices of M. & H. are fixed and invariable. They cannot afford the large discounts made by manufacturers of inferior work, many of whom sell at 40 to 50 per cent discount.

At the prices at which they are sold, the Mason and Hamlin Organs are believed to be not only the best but the cheapest instruments of their class. Send for circular, with particulars, to MASON & HAMLIN, William Mason & E. S. Hoadly's New Method for the Pianoforte.

Already a second edition of this new work is ready and nearly sold in advance. It is new in method and matter, embracing modern exercises and expedients not heretofore presented, while its selection of Exercises, Recreations, and Pieces, mostly from composers of recognized eminence, is unusually large and very choice.

This is the first instruction book to include the technicals of modern pianoforte playing. It has a full elucidation and illustration of Mr. Mason's new system of Accentual Treatment of Exercises, by which the attention of the pupil is almost compelled, and careless practice is rendered nearly impossible, while not only the hands, but also the mind, taste, and artistic perceptions are cultivated and trained.

It is eminently a practical work, the result of long and most successful experience in the actual business of pianoforte teaching. It is carefully progressive, very clear and perspicuous and full in its explanations and directions, illustrated by cuts and diagrams, and is adapted to the use of young beginners as well as of those who have made progress. 240 pp large 4to. PROSPECTUS FOR 1868 OF

THE NEW YORK LEDGER,

THE GREAT FAMILY PAPER.

All the Greatest Writers Write For It.

The reason that the NEW YORK LEDGER has the largest circulation is, that it is the BEST PAPER. Why should it not have the largest circulation? More labor, more talent, more money, are bestowed upon it than upon any other paper. Its moral tone is always pure and elevated. The leading Clergymen of the United States, the Presidents of the principal Colleges, the greatest Poets, Wits and Statesmen of the country, are among the contributors to its columns. The reader always gets more than his money's worth in the Ledger. We have always had the BEST WRITERS, and always shall have them, cost what it may. Whatever we have promised in our advertisements heretofore, our readers will bear us witness that we have always performed: and not only that, but a great deal more. For instance, in our last Prospectus, we announced a story by Henry Ward Beecher, which we gave; but we did not announce Horace Greeley's Autobiography, which we are now publishing; nor did we announce the series of articles entitled ADVICE TO YOUNG MEN, by the Twelve College Presidents. The rule on which the LEDGER is conducted is to get the best of everything, whether it has been promised or not. The public recognize this fact; and it is from their desire to obtain the very best paper that they give the LEDGER the preference; hence its unparalleled and unapproached circulation, being over three hundred thousand copies.

Now, for the new year: All our present corps of popular authors will continue to write for the LEDGER: we shall begin the new year with a new story by Mrs. Southworth; the Honorable Horace Greeley will continue his Autobiography; Fanny Fern her sparkling sketches; John G. Saxe his humorous poems; Sylvanus Cobb, Jr., his entertaining stories; Henry Ward Beecher his original papers; James Parton his instructive Biographical sketches; Miss Dupuy her Dramatic Narratives; Mary Kyle Dallas, Amy Randolph, Caroline Conrad, Mrs Vaughan, their delightful short stories; William Cullen Bryant, Alice Cary, Dr Charles D Gardette, Geo D Prentice, Nathan D Urner, Emma Alice Brown, Mrs Schultz, Wm Ross Wallace, their Poems.

A NEW FEATURE OF THE LEDGER.—Advice to Young Women.—A new feature of the LEDGER, in the beginning of the year, will be a series of Twelve Articles, written expressly for Young Ladies, by Twelve of the most Distinguished Women of the United States, including Mrs. Horace Mann, Mrs Lydia Maria Child, Mrs General Banks, Mrs Horace Greeley, and Madame Le Vert.

OUR TERMS FOR 1868 — NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE.

Single copies, $3 per annum; four copies, $10, which is $2 50 a copy; eight copies, $20. The party who sends us $20 for a club of eight copies (all sent at one time) will be entitled to a copy free. Postmasters and others who get up clubs in their respective towns can afterwards add single copies at $2 50. No subscription taken for a less period than one year. Canada subscribers must send twenty cents in addition to the subscription, to pay the American postage. When a draft or money-order can conveniently be sent, it will be preferred; as it will prevent the possibility of the loss of money by mail. The postage on the LEDGER to all parts of the country is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable at the office where the paper is delivered.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD

FIRST MORTGAGE THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT COUPON BONDS.

Principal and Interest Payable in Gold Coin,

Represent the preferred claim upon one of the most important lines of communication in the world, as it is the sole link between the Pacific Coast and the Great Interior Basin, over which the immense overland travel must pass, and the MAIN TRUNK LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

The Road is now nearly completed from Sacramento to the Richest Mining Regions in the Salt Lake Basin, and is being rapidly carried forward by the largest force of laborers ever employed by any Railroad Company on this continent.

The natural, legitimate, commercial business of the road surpasses all precious expectation, and is profitable beyond parallel, even among the oldest roads in existence. The earnings and expenses for the Quarter ending Oct 31, were as follows, in GOLD:

Gross Earnings	Operating Expenses	Net Earnings
$593,847.92	$102,088.61	$491,759.31

This result, however, would have been far greater but for the inability of wagon teams to forward the freight and passengers from the temporary terminus in the mountains.

The United States Government and the State and Cities of California have so aided and fostered the Great Enterprise, that the Company will assume very light annoel interest obligations, and will have the following ample Resources at command for the Construction:

Donations in Lands, Bonds, Concessions, etc, (without lien)	$12,800,000
Capital Stock, Net Earnings, etc, (no lien)	11,000,000
Loans (subordinate lien)	3,000,000
U S Subsidy Bonds, 726 miles (subordinate lien)	25,517,000
First Mortgage Bonds	25,517,000
Resources, first 726 miles	$76,834,000

The FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS are in sums of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, and are offered for sale, for the present, at 95 per cent. and accrued Interest from July 1st, in currency, at which rate they yield nearly NINE PER CENT UPON THE INVESTMENT.

These Bonds, authorized by the Pacific Railroad Acts of Congress, are issued only as the work progresses, and to the same extent only as the Bonds granted by the Government, and are the prior lien upon the whole valuable property furnished by the above Resources. They possess special assurances and advantages over other Corporate Securities, and are destined to rank among THE BEST INVESTMENTS IN THE WORLD, from their unusual attractions of safety, soundness, and profit.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CHRISTMAS AT THE PARSONAGE.

Mr. Editor: After being Presiding Elder for two years, and my health failing, I was appointed by the last annual Conference to the ——station. (Those who have once been Presiding Elder must either be very religious or very ambitious ever to desire the office again.)

In obedience to the orders given, we proceeded at once to make arrangements to move to our new home, so that a week after the appointments were read out we were on our way. So much for being in light, good, trotting trim. By good plans, well carried out, we arrived at ——— five or six days before Christmas. Good brethren met us at the wharf with hack, dray, etc., to move our possessions to the parsonage. "Will you go to my house?" or "would you prefer going directly home?" "Home"—home, of course; who ever heard of an itinerant, who had been moving for fourteen years, to whom the word "home" had not a peculiar charm. So home we went, and found that everything was in order, well arranged—fires burning, wood, coal, etc., all ready to commence living comfortably. Oh! what an unction to the soul of the weary itinerant family; how it realizes the promise of "an hundred fold," and strengthens them yet to trust.

Christmas eve comes. The children wonder if old "Chris" will know that we have moved. One proposes to send a letter to him, and a little piece of paper, scribbled over, is put in pa's pocket. The good wife wants to make the children happy with a joyous Christmas. "It comes but once a year." The father feels his pocket-book, and says "well!" But soon a knock at the door calls attention. A fine turkey, with the compliments of——, etc. Father smiles, mother smiles—all smile. Pleasant, isn't it? But a turkey wont go into a stocking. Another knock—a large basket full. Pies, fruits, nick-nacks—sundry little bundles, all marked, for the stocking. The smile grows to a laugh. Another knock—another fine fat Christmas turkey, and then sundries again and again. So the father says, "if this keeps on I will be like the man in the Bible—have to pull down and build larger." The little ones sleep and awake—the stockings all full, and old "Chris" could not get all in. A chair placed near is well filled with bright sunny faces. They look and laugh, and laugh and look again, while father and mother look on and are happy.

Mr. Editor, if you were near you should have a turkey for your dinner to-day, and some "sundries" too. And would you not love to serve such a people as this? May the good Lord abundantly bless them.

Notnile.

December 25, 1867.

[Wish we had been near, and should like to serve such a people. Never had a turkey given to us, that we remember, during the last quarter of a century; have eaten turkeys, or helped to eat a good many, but never under such circumstances. Have known a good many preachers who did get such things at such a time; have sometimes seen the turkey said to be a "Christmas turkey;" have always felt glad to know that there were such things—until this Christmas. Went home on Christmas eve—no presents for anybody, or from anybody—no money to buy any—nothing but faith—no large amount of that. Found the family radiant—a turkey in the front room! Truth is stranger than fiction. 'Twas from a lady in the city—good soul that she is, a member of the church, a true friend. She lives where the whole surface of this earth is paved with brick, and has no tree in her yard. We wonder where it was raised. The next day was Christmas, and a beautiful breezy day it was; more like March than December. The sun came out joyfully; the children had good appetites; the cook was successful, and about 3 o'clock P. M. we had the satisfaction of sitting down at home to a "Christmas turkey."—Editor.]

FARM AND GARDEN.

Rice, Ramie, and the Orange.

Few papers are doing as much in aid of the agricultural interests of Louisiana as the Planter's Banner. The editor, in an account of his recent trip to New Orleans, presents some excellent practical observations upon the culture of plants which are suited to the soil and climate of the Southwest. We copy a few of them:

RICE CULTURE IN TERREBONNE.

Quite a number of small planters make rice in Terrebonne parish every year. But few, if any, of them have facilities for flooding their rice.

The usual mode of making unflooded rice is this: They plow their land the same as they would for oats, harrow, pulverize and put it in good order. They then sow it in drills from eighteen to twenty-four inches apart, and from a bushel to a bushel and a peck of seed to the acre. They have rice sowing machines at the warehouses in New Orleans which drill it as it should be done. When the rice is out of the ground a few inches they run a small one-horse plow between the drills and finish up with hoes. They reap it with sickles at the rate of half an acre a day to the hand, and tie it up like oats or wheat in small bundles.

It takes about the labor of one hand to ten acres of unflooded rice to plow, sow, cultivate and harvest it, though extra hands have to be employed a few days during harvest, since rice ripens so rapidly that one could not harvest ten acres soon enough to save it. The yield of unflooded rice to the acre varies much in different seasons. The extreme yield ranges somewhere from five to eight barrels clean rice per acre. A barrel of clean rice weighs two hundred pounds. Flooded rice yields about ten barrels to the acre, and one hand can cultivate a great deal more of it than of unflooded rice.

Some people in making unflooded rice sow the seed at the same time they plow their land. They sow their seed in every third or fourth furrow, and cover with the plow and harrow after the plowing and sowing is completed.

Mr. Easton, on the Black, made one hundred and fifty barrels of rice last season after the overflow.

ORANGES, ETC.

Oranges grow in great perfection in Terrebonne parish. The trees seem to have a richer appearance than they do in most other places. The leaves have a rich, dark green hue, the fruit is large and well developed, and the bodies of most of the older trees are large and well formed. Dealers in fruit from New Orleans purchase the oranges on the trees at from eight to ten dollars per thousand, and gather them with no trouble whatever to the proprietor.

The estimates of the yield of oranges to the acre vary widely. Some say that forty trees to the acre and two thousand oranges to the tree is a fair estimate. Orange trees certainly grow well and are not crowded when planted twenty feet distant from each other. A hundred trees can be planted on an acre. More than five thousand oranges have been taken from a single tree. Reckoning two thousand oranges to the tree in an orchard of full grown trees, and we have two hundred thousand oranges from an acre, or sixteen hundred dollars, at eight dollars per thousand.

The banana crop has been fine in Terrebonne this year. Some people think that by paying a little attention to this crop they might make them very profitable.

Pine apples can be raised in Terrebonne with a little extra protection which costs but little, since the stalk on which the fruit grows is but two or three feet high.

An acre of pecan trees would yield a larger profit than oranges, and still no attention has ever been given to this crop. These trees will bear a hundred years or more in succession. One acre of large trees, bearing the large pecans, would give a handsome support to a large family of economical habits. Still people have heretofore given but little attention to these matters. They will do it, however, at some future day.

THE RAMIE PLANT.

Mr. Bacon, of the Picayune office, has taken great interest, through the papers and otherwise, in the introduction of the ramie plant into this State from Mexico. Mr. Roezl first introduced the plant to the notice of the people of New Orleans, and now has a large number of the roots of the ramie for sale. Mr. Bacon informed us that those who have cultivated the plant in this State are satisfied that it will prove a success. When once planted and well set it produces from two to five cuttings yearly, one hundred and fifty pounds of fibre to the acre, which is said to sell in London at fifty cents per pound. A specimen of this fibre, grown in this State, may be seen in P. Pecot's showcase, Odd Fellows' Hall. The plant will do well in all the States bordering on the Gulf of Mexico. Mr. Bacon gave us many interesting facts on the ramie, which we will publish in some future number of the Banner.

If this plant proves a success it will entirely supersede cotton in the Southern sections of all the Gulf States. We can only give the facts as we get them from others. We have thirty or forty roots which we shall plant in our garden this winter, and we will be able to say something on the subject from personal observation in due course of time.

ON BAYOU BLACK.

The sugar houses along Bayou Chuckahoula and the Black were "all silent alone, the cane knives unlifted, the night horn unblown." The land along this bayou is rich, equal to the best in the State, but without good protective levees on the Mississippi it is worthless, or nearly so.

They made good rice here last year after the overflow, planted in June. The crawfish eat up the growing rice during the overflow. They find it to be a good plan to plow their lands intended for rice in the spring before the waters rise, and when the overflow has nearly passed off, in May or June, they sow the rice broadcast in the water like oats or wheat, and run a light harrow over it while yet covered with water. They make five or six barrels to the acre by this process.

THE DUCK TRADE.

Quite a trade in ducks, Forney "dead ducks," is carried on between some of the stations on this railroad and New Orleans. One day last week three thousand five hundred were sent to the city in one day from the Bayou Des Allemandes station alone. One duck merchant is said to sometimes employ twenty hunters daily, besides purchasing all irregular hunters have for sale. This game sells in the New Orleans market at from fifty to sixty cents a pair.

A Confirmed Grumbler.

The following sketch may be a caricature, though we think there is a human likeness about it so real as to be easily recognized:

Some time ago there lived in Edinburgh a well known grumbler named Sandy Black, whose often returning fits of spleen or indigestion produced amusing scenes of senseless irritability, which were highly relished by all except the brute's good, patient little wife. One morning Sandy rose bent on a quarrel. The haddies and eggs were excellent, done to a turn, and had been ordered by himself the previous evening; and breakfast passed without a looked-for cause of complaint.

"What will you have for dinner, Sandy?" said Mrs. Black.

"A chicken, madam," said the husband.

"Roast or boiled?" asked the wife.

"Confound it, madam, if you had been a good and considerate wife you'd have known before this what I liked," Sandy growled out, and slamming the door behind him, left the house. It was in the spring, and a friend who was present heard the little wife say:

"Sandy's bent on a disturbance to-day; I shall not please him, do what I can."

The dinner time came, and Sandy and his friend sat down to dinner. The fish was eaten in silence, and on raising the cover of the dish before him, in a towering passion he called out:

"Boiled chicken! I hate it, madam. A chicken boiled is a chicken spoiled."

Immediately the cover was raised for another chicken, roasted to a turn.

"Madam, I won't eat roasted chicken," roared Sandy; "you know how it should have been cooked!"

At that instant a broiled chicken, with mushrooms, was placed on the table.

"Without green peas!" roared the grumbler.

"Here they are, dear," said Mrs. Black.

"How dare you spend my money in that way?"

"They were a present," said the wife, interrupting him.

Rising from his chair and rushing from the room, amidst a roar of laughter from his friend, he clenched his fist and shouted:

"How dare you receive a present without my leave?"

SCIENTIFIC.

The Largest Steam Hammer in the World.—Mr. Krupp is about to construct at his works at Essen (Prussia) a single-acting steam hammer far exceeding in size any now in existence. The designs for this hammer—which will have a head weighing 120 tuns—have already been prepared, and the patterns are now in hand. At present, the largest hammer at M. Krupp's enormous establishment is one with a 50-ton head, falling 9 feet 6 inches. This is a single-acting hammer—the only one on the works, all the others being double-acting. The smaller hammers have heads varying from twenty-five tons downward. In addition to these M. Krupp has also some peculiar tilt hammers, in which a steam cylinder is placed between the head and fulcrum of the hammer, and the piston working in this cylinder is directly coupled to the hammer-shaft by a connecting-rod.

A Useful Hint.—A subscriber writes as follows:—"A tin tube made like a siphon, driven into the vent of a barrel of wine or cider, and the other end inserted into a pail of water, will prevent the air from entering the barrel, while the gas escapes through the water. Make the barrel otherwise tight. When the cider or wine in the barrel is done working the water in the pail will cease bubbling. It requires no filling up, and there is no loss. I have tried it." We will only add that the tube can be made by any tin-plate worker, and when once made can always be kept for future use.—Farm and Fireside.

The plan is meeting with favor in England of instituting a system of accidental insurance for miners, the mine-owners paying the premiums and insuring the men, while, on the other hand, the companies are to issue policies not to each individual by name, but for such a number of strikers, boys, etc., employed. The individual miners might come or go without affecting the policy, and in case of fatal accident in the mine the insurance would be paid without reference to identity of the victims, but according to number and rank.

M. Paul Morin, the chemist in charge of the Aluminium Bronze works, near Paris, asserts that the melted alloy, when poured into the mold, is transparent; and Mr. T. Sterry Hunt, to whom the assertion was made, and who saw the operation performed, states that the appearance of the molten stream seemed to corroborate the statement. There is a possibility of optical illusion in the inspection of a body which is itself intensely luminous, to discover whether it is transparent.

An American Invention in England.—About two years ago a new mode of making wells was invented in this country. It consisted simply in driving a tube into the ground until water was reached. This invention has been patented in England, and is now coming into use there. The British government has recognized the merit of the invention by ordering a large number of tubes for the military expedition now fitting out for the release of the English captives in Abyssinia.

Extensive works are under way in San Francisco for the manufacture of lead on a large scale. The supply of ores is very abundant, and generally sufficient silver is in combination to pay for transportation and extraction.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.

TENTH SESSION.

The exercises of the school will be resumed on Wednesday, October, 2d, 1867.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education:

Particular care is bestowed on the moral and social culture of the pupils.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a satchel for dirty clothes.

It is urgently requested that Students be prompt in their attendance. A few days absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms: Board and Tuition per session, $360.
Payments.—$200 in advance—balance 1st March.

Tuition of Day Scholars, per session, $75 00 payable—one half in advance—balance 1st March.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the School demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as Teachers, gentlemen of the highest character and ability,

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Doremus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence do they come of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and by employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donations and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades, and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church the Board of Directors, representing in its body such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's notes or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated with all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

And at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height before the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which have no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the appreciation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Broiling, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to do, and even more than it is here described, is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE
AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

Or, Vegetable Medicine.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have but little change to report in the general movement of the market since our last issue. Cotton has continued in active demand, and the competition among buyers has enabled factors to realize higher prices, at least for the better qualities. Both Sugar and Molasses have also been in request, to the full extent of the receipts, with a general tendency in favor of the sellers. But in nearly every other department of trade, including Tobacco and most articles of Western Produce, the market has been extremely dull, and operations have been confined to the supply of the local trade.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed with an active demand, at stiffening rates, Ordinary being quoted at 12¼ to 12¾c, Good Ordinary at 13¼ to 13½, Low Middling at 13¾ to 14¼, Middling at — to 14½, Strict Middling at 14¾ to —, and Good Middling at 15¼ to —, since which prices have continued buoyant and the demand has been active, but operations have been restricted by moderate supplies. On Saturday the market opened with more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, and the movement being moreover checked by the limited scope afforded to buyers in the stock on sale, the business was confined to 4,200 bales, at prices showing a general upward tendency, but without any notable improvement. The same features characterized the movement on Monday, excepting that the supply was more ample and operations on an enlarged scale, comprising 5,800 bales, partly at previous rates, the ordinary grades showing no improvement, and partly at fuller prices, showing, in many instances, an advance of ¼c. Tuesday, at the opening of business, there appeared to be a very limited amount on sale, but at a later hour more samples were opened, and, as the demand continued active, the day's transactions summed up 5,250 bales, at about previous rates for Ordinary and Good Ordinary, but at fuller prices for the middling and better qualities.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,250 bales, taken partly for the North, but mostly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 19,035 bales, against 17,215 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 1,820 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 238,650 bales, against 335,389 bales the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 81,769 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 37,424 bales to Great Britain of 19,747 to France, and an increase of 67,664 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we modify our quotations as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	12¼ to 12¾
Good Ordinary	13¼ to 13½
Low Middling	14 to 14¼
Middling	14½ to 14¾
Strict Middling	15 to —

SUGAR.—The supplies are yet barely sufficient for the demand, which is good, especially for the better grades of open kettle, and prices have ruled with an upward tendency, showing a slight further advance.

MOLASSES.—The demand is active at full prices, and 2,000 barrels and some half barrels, about all the receipts on Saturday and Monday, sold at 40c per gallon for Inferior, 50c for Common, 57½c for Good Common, 62½c for Fair, 60 to 65c for Good, 68 to 72c for Prime and 74 to 75c for Choice.

CORN.—The market has been dull and depressed. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 4,000 sacks at $1 05 to $1 07½ and $1 10 per bushel for White and Yellow.

PORK.—The market is dull. There is no demand at wholesale, and only a limited retail business is doing at $22 50 to $23 50 per bbl. for Mess.

BACON.—Rain and the change of weather from warm to cold have caused a better feelings in the market for this article.

UNABRIDGED
NEW ILLUSTRATED
OVER 3000 FINE ENGRAVINGS.

10,000 Words and Meanings not in other Dictionaries.

A necessity to every intelligent family, student, teacher and professional man. What Library is complete without the best English Dictionary?

The work is the richest book of information in the world. There is probably more real education in it than can be bought for the same amount of money in any language. Every parsonage should have a copy at the expense of the parish. It would improve many pulpits more than a trip to Europe, and at a much less cost.—N Y Christian Advocate.

Lay it upon your table by the side of the Bible; it is a better expounder than many which claim to be expounders.—M. Life Boat.

BISHOP SIMPSON says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the best Magazines published for children."

BISHOP STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I believe that its introduction into every household would prove a blessing to young and old.

REV. GEO. D. BOARDMAN says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I am delighted with 'The Children's Hour.' I do not see how a more entertaining, instructive or profitable Magazine could be put in the hands of our children."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"This dear little monthly visitant we believe to be by far the purest, safest, and most attractive magazine for the little one's at home, published in this country."

MR. JOHN B. GOUGH says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I can endorse it thoroughly. It is a most welcome visitor to the family of children at my own home."

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

is as beautiful as the best typography and the best artists can make it. Two volumes a year, beginning in January and July. The number for January, 1868, will be the most beautiful number of a child's magazine ever published. Terms as above.

Conference Institutions in Alabama.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE AND MALE INSTITUTE.

SUMMERFIELD, Ala., Jan. 2, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: These useful institutions are the property of the church and under the supervision and control of the Mobile Conference. The results of the war have very nearly swept away the large endowments given by the friends of the church and education to the university. The legacy left by a friend of the church to pay the board of ministers' daughters while at college has been so managed as to become a debt instead of a help to the Centenary College. These institutions, once so flourishing and independent, are now left to battle in the midst of a ruined country and an impoverished church—to live if they can, or die if they must. It has been suggested by many superficial thinkers that the way to kill a school or college is to intimate that the professors are going to leave or that the institution is going down. Falsehood reported that the Confederacy was safe and in no danger, and its truest friends believed the statement, and therefore regarded still greater effort and sacrifice as useless; and when the whole truth was told it was too late—all was lost. Truth never damaged any cause that was worth sustaining. I am personally acquainted with the real condition of these colleges; and while their prospects may be no worse as to patronage than many similar institutions in the country, but much better, yet duty compels me to say that if the church in the Mobile Conference does not rally and come at once to their aid, either by increased patronage or financial assistance, or both, they cannot live through the crisis now upon the country without unreasonable sacrifices on the part of the professors.

It does not require the vision of a prophet to foresee that the next two or three years will be years of great financial depression among all classes. Will it not be prudent on the part of the church to look the facts full in the face, and, like a wise and experienced mariner, timely begin to take in sail and prepare at once for the worst? The church in the Mobile Conference can, and no doubt will, by a union of effort and a little well-timed self-denial, save to the church and their children their educational interests.

The most effectual way to save and build up the educational interests of the church is for those who have the means at once to send forward their sons and daughters to their own colleges, where they can be thoroughly educated, and their faith and morals certainly cared for. Has not the folly, not madness, of laying up treasure for children been so signally spoken that no sane mind should attempt it again, at the expense of educating his children. Gold can rust, but cannot buy the jewels of cultivated mind. Education never dies. Thieves cannot steal it, governments cannot confiscate it. Who has made a safer investment for his property than the man who has educated his sons and daughters? Whose mind is more at ease in these days of trouble and gloom than the man's who spent his fortune in the culture of his children's minds? There are at this time, no doubt, sons and daughters enough of Methodist parents at college in the different States, if they were all where they belong and ought to be, to fill our college halls to overflowing. If the Methodist community really felt that their own colleges would go down for want of patronage, perhaps not one in twenty of those students now abroad would have been sent off to other institutions. There is not a Methodist in the bounds of the Mobile Conference who is not directly interested in the prosperity of these church institutions. From these centers of piety and culture go out intelligence all over the church, in the pulpit and laity. These colleges are educating the masses by supplying the country with teachers. What hope have the ministers of the Mobile Conference to give their sons and daughters those higher advantages of culture but through the prosperity and perpetuity of their own colleges? How many among us are able to send our children abroad and pay their board and tuition?

It may be replied that there are other schools besides those under the control of the conference; and so there are, and many of them taught by some of the most worthy and highly cultivated ministers of the conference. I wish the conference had more of the same kind to spare for such work. But these institutions may pass away when the present parties who now sustain them see proper to leave them. The colleges and institutions of learning under the patronage and control of the conference are a part of the furniture of the church, and in this age and country a very important part, which cannot be dispensed with without great damage to the cause of Christ.

The professors charge no tuition in the university for young men studying for the ministry, or for ministers' sons whose fathers are in the regular work. Neither does Professor Massey, in the Male Institute at Summerfield. If sixty scholars could be procured for the Centenary College, the daughters of ministers could be taught free of tuition in all respects, and four of them at a time boarded free of charge. Many of the traveling ministry can locate their families near these institutions and give their children all these advantages, and at the same time attend to their regular work. Are the preachers of the Mobile Conference prepared to let such privileges—the labor of years—pass out of their hands? Certainly not. And yet there is danger of it. Who shall educate the Methodist children in the Mobile Conference? Who shall legislate, in coming years, for the people of Alabama? Wisdom is power; and when madness and folly have had their short reign, and law and order and justice assert their right to be heard, then men of educated minds will control the destinies of the State. But will they be our sons or the sons of foreigners? That is with us to say, and say now, by effort and self-denial, which will keep the institutions of learning above the wave which threatens to engulf them.

There never was a time in the history of this country when the people had motives of so high a character to educate the rising generation as the present.

THE N. C. CONFERENCES.—The statistics of this Conference are: Number of local preachers, 154; white members, 31,456; colored members, 3,159; infants baptized, 643; adults baptized, 1,535; Sunday schools, 343; teachers, 2,063; scholars, 15,531.

Increase this year, 1,094 white members; 384 infants baptized; 11 adults baptized; 91 Sunday-schools; 504 Sunday-school teachers; 5,177 Sunday-school scholars.

Decrease this year, 24 local preachers; 1,915 colored members.—Southern Christian Advocate.

WHITE SUPREMACY.

A speech in Congress by Hon. James Brooks, of New York, was delivered on the 18th of December, which equals anything upon the negro, in the intensity of its treatment, ever uttered in those halls, at any period, by Southern states men. We give but a part of it, to show the singular change coming over the sentiments of Northern men at this moment:

* * * * *

CIVILIZATION AND CHRISTIANITY HAVE NOT CHANGED HIM.

Four thousand years then he was exactly what he is now, Anno Domini 1867—and what he ever will be, save as he comes in contact with the civilization of a superior race. The Egyptians whose genius created the pyramids, the Sphynx, the obelisk — the Carthagenian, whose soldiers under Hannibal surmounted the then horrid Alps—rolled over the Campagna of Rome, and the plains of Capua—the Roman, whose arms and whose arts embraced the whole world—all, have brought their civilization and their arts before the negro race, but all, all in vain. The Church and holy foundations in Carthage, in Cyrene, in Alexandria, throughout all Egypt, and far, far up the Nile, and asceties from upper Egypt, clothed in the wild raiment of the Baptist, wandered forth in sheepskins and goatskins, and dwelt in deserts, and on mountains, in dens and caves, to bring the negro to Christ, but all, all in vain. Pagan, savage, cannibal even, the negro in his own native home, for thousands of years has defied all civilization, all christianity—and only when in close individual contact with the superior race is the negro then improved or improvable. He clings to his gris-gris, jujus, fetichism—with as much pertinacity as he did hundreds of years ago. But a wonderful imitative genius is that of the negro! It displays itself suprisingly in music and in a variety of our culinary arts. When associated with the white man, the negro, through his faculties of imitation, becomes in many occupations almost the equal of the white man. But when left to his own guidance, as in Hayti, in Jamaica, or in upper Egypt, he returns to his barbaric tastes, his gris-gris, his jujus, the fetich, etc., etc.

NO NEGRO POETS, ARCHITECTS, NO GREAT MECHANICS, ETC.

Where, oh tell me where, sir, has the pure blooded negro, unassisted by the white man, exhibited any of the triumphs of genius? Where have we found that race producing a Homer, a Phidias, a Praxiteles, a Socrates, a Demosthenes, a Virgil, or a Shakespeare? Where has it produced any great architect, like Michael Angelo? Where any great poet, where any heroic soldier like Alexander, Cæsar, or Napoleon—where any wonderful mechanic? What negro of pure blood ever started a steam engine, or a spinning-jenny, a screw, a lever, the wheel or the pulley?—What negro has invented a telegraph, or discovered a star, a satellite, or an asteroid? What negro ever construeted a palatial edifice like this in which we are assembled — these Corinthian columns—these frescoed walls? Negro history makes no mark in this great world's progress. That history is all a blank, blauk, sir. The negro can never rise above a certain range of intelligence. The children of the negro, up to ten or fifteen years of age, may be as bright and as intelligent as white children. They acquire knowledge as rapidly, but after that early age the negro youth does not advance as does the white youth. While the white man is increasing in knowledge till the day of his death, the negro reaches before the age of maturity a point beyond which he cannot well advance, in anything save in the arts of mere imitation.

Mr. Garfield—Will the gentleman tell us who Euclid was?

Mr. Brooks—Does the gentleman mean to intimate that Euclid was a negro? Why, sir, he had not a particle of wool on his head.

Mr. Garfield—He was only an Abyssiniau.

THE LESSONS OF LIFE—THE ARABS FIRST.

Mr. Brooks—Now, Mr. Speaker, I am about to show further that wherever there has been an admixture of a superior race with the negro, the utter deterioration and degeneracy, if not the destruction, of the domiuant race has been the result. Look at the history of the Middle Ages, when the men of our race were involved in mental darkness, when even the priests could not read or write, and when books were not printed. At that time the Arabs had almost all the knowledge and learning in the world. Under the banner of their prophet they started from the holy City of Mecca, and swept along the whole Northern coast of the Mediterranean, by Alexandria, Carthage and beyond the Pillars of Hercules, aye, carrying over the Sierra Nevada of Spain, into the beautiful valley of the Grenadian La Vega, their wonderful arts, as well as their victorious arms. They construeted the magnificent Alhambra; they created the Alcazars of Seville and Cordova. Our countryman, Irving, in glowing prose, with thoughts that breathe and words that burn, has pictured their marches and conquests, and their arts as well as their arms. The whole Christian world shrank and trembled before the mighty genius of this Arab race, while it was overrunning Spain and threatening Europe with downfall. But in an evil hour they who had planted the noblest banners of poetry, and of prose, of philosophy, and of history, in the front rank of the learning of the world—they who had invented the science of notation, and taught us decimals—they who had created algebra, and given it the Arabic name; they who had measured the heavens in their astronomy, and given the very names we now use to the stars and constellations, that sparkle in the sky; they who bequeathed to us the Arabic named Almanac, (the Diary,) the little work now indispensable in every man's house—alas, they mingle the blood of their heroic race with the Nubian—the negro—with the inferior and degraded races of Africa, all about them, and they rapidly fell from their exalted position into the degraded pool of races, with whom they had commingled. Those once heroic Arabs were driven from Grenada—and lingering awhile upon the coasts of the Mediterranean, they re-fled into Africa, dishonored, degraded, destroyed, by forgetting their Arab nobility, and becoming Nubians, negroes, and other inferior races of Africa.

THE OTTOMAN TURKS NEXT.

Years afterwards there sallied forth from Asia, that great store house of nations, the Ottoman Turks, under the banner of the Prophet, and their Crescent swept over almost the same breadth of territory that the Arabs had gone over before them. If they paused at the Pillars of Hereules in the West, their scimetars flashed in the East, under the walls of Vienna, and swept off every living man that showed himself on the open plains of Austria or Bohemia. But alas! they entered upon the same degraded crime of amalgamation and miscegenation, and they soon emasculated these once heroic Turks, the approach of whose Crescent had made the Christian tremble in every Court of Europe, and upon every navigable internal sea. In their harems, the thick-lipped, wooly headed negro woman was mixed up with the beautiful Circassian and Georgian, and children of all hues, and colors, and races, were the product of this hateful miscegenation; and God—even the God of Mohammed—has punished the Moslem by his own degradation and his overthrow for violating that first law of nature—the preservation of the purity of race. The Crescent no more waves in terror under the walls of Malta, as pirate, or corsair, no more affrights on the Adriatic, or the Danube, but trembles in doubtful existence on the Sea of Marmora. I myself have seen, in Constantinople, around a Mosque where the Sultan was at prayers, some thirty or forty beautiful Circassians and Georgians of his harem, kissing the hand of a eunuch, an Ethiopian, a negro selected from the interior of Africa, as the custodian of these women, and who thus had become their master. The moment the Turk thus associated himself with the negro, or negress, and recognized him or her, either as brother or sister, from that hour the Turkish Empire began to crumble, until now it exists only by the toleration of the Christian powers of Europe.

THE MOORS AND THE NEGROES NEXT.

Let gentlemen, then, but study the history of the Arabs in their mixture of races, let them but study the history of the Turks, let them but study the history of Morocco, if they ever take the trouble to study at all, and they will see what a fatal step they are taking now in equalizing unnatural races, or rather in subjecting the superior white race of the South to negroes from Africa. Muley Ismael was Emperor of Morocco about 1680, and he had a negro, as well as a Georgian wife, between whom and others were born from him, the historian records, 300 children, the last born when he was near 80 years of age. It took a hundred years for the Moorish race to recover itself from the fatal crime of Muley Ismael; and it will cost a hundred years to recover from your legislation, if the people continue you in power another election.

THE LATIN-SPANISH AND THE ANGLO-SAXON RACE AS SETTLERS ON THE AMERICAN CONTINENT.

But I need not go to the Mediterranean. I need not cross the Atlantic to show the fatal step you are taking by this Reconstruction Bill in going into this co-partnership with negroes. Our continent has been settled by two classes of men, Anglo-Saxon, Celt and Teuton in the North, and the Spanish Latin race in the South. God never made a nobler race of men than the Hidalgos of Spain, who, under Columbus, in a little caraval of forty tons, started on the trackless Atlantic in search of the then unknown America. God never made a nobler race, I repeat, than those Hidalgos of Spain. What did they do? They ran all along the Gulf of Mexico, from Florida on the north to Cape Horn on the southern verge to South America. They settled Mexeio and Venezuela, New Granada and Chili, and Peru, and coasting all the Northern Pacific, imprinted the holy classic names of old Spain upon the now golden mountains and wine-covered valleys of the State of California. They climbed the snow-clad Cordilleras, and planted their banner on every hill and every valley of Mexico, Pern and Chili. They drove Montezuma from the halls of his Aztec ancestors, and under Cortes and Pizarro, Peruvian, Mexican and semi-barbarian, civilization fell below the mighty prowess of their arms?—Their heroic deeds, their lofty chivalry, their Christian loyalty now read more like the romances of a Froissart than as they are, the true record of history.

Our Anglo-Saxon fathers started later from the shores of England and landed upon the Rock of Plymouth or upon the flats of Jamestown. The Puritan himself, trembling over his rock for awhile, in terror of the tomahawk, ventured at last at what is deemed gigantic heroism. He crossed the Connecticut and the Hudson, and slowly crept up the Mowhawk and halted for years and years upon Lakes Erie, Ontario and Huron. The cavaliers of Jamestown threaded their way up the river James, stealthily wound over the pases of the Alleghanies, and looked down at last with astonishment and affright upon la belle riviere of Ohio. But all this time these heroic hidalgos of Spain were spreadiug the name and fame of Castile and Arragon throughout the whole Americau continent, from Florida on the North to Cape Horn on the South, and from Cape Horn to California, while our Anglo-Saxon race stood shivering upon the Ohio and Lake Erie without the courage to advance further. What, sir, happened then? What has produced this difference between us and the holy Hidalgo? Why are they fallen, these men of the Armada, so exalted among all the nations of the earth, who made our ancestors in the days of Queen Elizabeth tremble on the throne? Why was it that in the Mexican war one regiment of our Anglo-Saxon, Celtic, Teutonic blood, again and again, put whole regiments of these once noble Hidalgos of Spain to flight at Chapultepec, the Garita and elsewhere? I will tell you why, sir. The Latin, the Spanish race, freed from that instinct of ours, which abhors all hybrid amalgamation, reveled in a fatally tempting admixture of blood—indulged in social and governmental copartnership with Aztecs, Indians, negroes, one and all. The pure blood, the azure blood of the old Hidalgos of Spain, lost and drained, dishonored and degraded, has dwindled into nothing, while the pure blood of the Anglo-Saxon, the Celts, Teutons, abhorring all such association and amalgamation with the negro, or the Indian, has leaped over Lake Erie, crossed la reviere, the great Father of Waters, the Mississippi, crowded the mountain passes of Colorado, Utah, Nevada and Moutana, rolled over the Rocky Mountains, and spread for hundreds of miles on the Pacific Ocean—carrying not only there, but everywhere, triumphant, from the Arctic to the Antarctic, the glorious flag of our country, that emblem of a pure race, and ever contrasting the glory and honor, the prowess of that race, with the degradation of the race of these once noble Hidalgos of Spain. Sir, you are on the eve now of an association and copartnership with a like inferior race, which, if the people do not drive you from this capital, will be destructive of us all, as has been a like copartnership to the Spaniards, the Turks, the Moors, and the Arabs. I have recalled these sacred lessons of history, and I hold them up to you for your admonition and warning. Heed, oh heed! Strike, but hear!

I have here, sir, and will publish in a note, a table of the different admixtures of races which have brought about the utter degradation of the white race in parts of Spanish America, and I hold them up to you as what you are legislating to make us.

Now, sir, this may be the last time in this Congress, when I shall have an opportunity thus at length to address a white audience upon the floor of this house. (Laughter.) Aye, you are so hurrying up this reconstruction, as you call it, that the African will soon come down from your galleries, and make his appearance here upon the floor side by side with you, as a man and a brother. He is soon to be within you, and part of you, a representative upon this floor. I tell you, gentlemen, that you make a fatal political mistake, for it will not be acquiesced in by the Northern people, and your violent, revolutionary acts here will be resisted in the elective tribunals elsewhere. In order to obtain a few additional negro representative votes upon this floor from the South, you are jeoparding the domination of your party in the great North and West. The Northern people are sound upon the subject of race, and where ethnology is discussed scientifically in the primary assemblies of the people, they will become more and more sound; and become more and more converts to the principles I have been laying down to-day. But I know, sir, that it is vain for me to invoke the majority of the House to pause. I have too often sent forth vain invocations here, and appealed to the majority of this House in vain and in vain. But, thank God! my voice and the voice of the few bold compatriots around me have gone beyond this Capitol and been heard among the people, who have responded by rolling up majorities in our favor, such as we did not dream of, so early, after our vain appeals to you here on this floor. But if you blacken this House this session of Congress, it will soon be whitened by the Democracy of the North and West. It cannot be that God inspired Columbus to the discovery of this great New World only to drive out Pequods, Chippewas, Mohawks, Pottawatemies, Sioux, Cheyennes, to substitute here a government of Congo negroes from Africa instead. It cannot be that Almighty wisdom has gathered here the best blood from all the nations of Europe to be overwhelmed, as Spanish blood has been, by the basest mixture of Aztec, Indian and Congo negro. But to you, pledged, manacled to party, and loving party more than you love country, or God, or man, I know I speak in vain. A voice even from the dead would not now change a single opinion here, but we shall be heard and heeded elsewhere. Posterity will vindicate our foresight. History will do us justice, while a grateful country is already sending in its plandits of "well done, good and faithful servants."

A Preacher's Surprise Party.

DEAR DR. KENER: You know what a great and snug place Dryades street German Church parsonage is. Well, comfortably housed in the same, on new year's eve I was conversing with my darling wife about the vicissitudes of the closing year: though surrounded by pestilence, our lives had been preserved, while others, perhaps more worthy than ourselves, had been taken away. In gratitude a tear pearled down the cheeks of my wife. But watch night was at hand. I was to preach at nine o'clock. The sermon which I had prepared on the Past, Present, and Future, like wind-tossed clouds moved through the sky of my mind. There! A knock at the door! Loudly I cried: 'Come in!' And in came friends with baskets, and these baskets were full—you have no idea what good things they contained! In short, Br. Keller and family gave me a surprise party. Is it a wonder that I preached a good sermon that night?

BRAZILIAN CORRESPONDENCE.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A GOOD COUNTRY?

RIO DE JANEIRO, Nov. 23, 1867.

MR. EDITOR: I have concluded that I will write you a short article, expressive of my views of Brazil, under the above caption.

1. Healthfulness is indispensable, for without it all else is of little value. In this respect Brazil is equal to the most favored regions of the earth. Even the valley of the Amazon is not generally an exception to this remark; on the contrary, I am now fully satisfied that many very extensive districts of that part of the empire are both healthy and very rich in soil and productions of almost every kind that minister to the wants or luxuries of human life. There are vast bodies of magnificent mountain or table lands awaiting the coming emigrant, and the general healthiness of the southern part of the empire is not questioned even by those who do not like it in other respects.

2. A pleasant climate is very necessary for the promotion of health and the comforts of life. In some parts of the United States the lands are rich and the country is considered healthy, yet the climate is so unpleasant that residence in those districts is not desirable. On the other hand, the climate of Brazil is equal to any on the globe. No language that I could use would give a stranger an adequate idea of its enchanting loveliness. To me it is still like a pleasing dream, and it recalls most vividly the early recollections of my boyhood, when I used to wish that our beautiful Indian summer in my native State, Virginia, would last all the year.—Here it does seem that dream is a pleasing reality. For nearly four months have I been here, and yet the captivating loveliness of the climate still continues. The air is soft and balmy, yet not enervating, and withal so free from those rude and sudden changes which are so common in other lands. Take this as an illustration: there have been but two hail storms, I am assured, in thirty years in the city of Rio and its surroundings. This is the middle of our southern spring season, and we have now the beautiful growing April showers and the pleasant April days as known in Alabama and Mississippi, but none of those sudden stormy changes so common in those States. Here we fear not the tornado nor the cold and killing wintry blasts so common in the States; and those beating, deluging rains, and those protracted, scorching droughts, so well known in all the cotton States, are almost unknown here.

Perhaps the reader will smile at the remark, but there is much in this part of Brazil, both in climate and productions, that reminds me of my Bible readings. Here there is an almost boundless plenty of choice fruits of many varieties; here is the almost perpetual spring or summer of Milton's Garden of Eden; here man can live with as little labor as anywhere else on earth. Malignant forms of disease are rare. Like the soft and pleasant climate, diseases are usually not of the malignant type.—Here, too, are "the earthen water pots" and the carts of the olden time, as they were in the days of the Saviour and his apostles, and many other things in this tropical land that will make one think of Bible scenes.

3. Good pure water. Without it no country can be considered pleasant or desirable. Here this is to be had in great abundance, and usually of the very best quality; and in regard to the manner of keeping it our people in the South may learn a lesson. The water is usually kept in large earthen pots or jars, and is brought up in the evening and put in those jars for drinking the next day. In this way it keeps cool and is very pleasant.

4. Facility in producing all the necessaries and all the substantial comforts of life. I know of no country that can excel Brazil in this respect. Let the intelligent planter or farmer consider these facts: any country that is otherwise desirable, and in addition produces easily and freely, all the year round, an abundant supply of good nutritious grasses for horses and cattle, must be an easy country to live in; and when we add that these grasses are no more in the way of a farmer than clover or timothy, he will see that half the labor needed to secure the comforts of life in the middle States will suffice here, for here we have no winter. The "capim" grows the year round, and is usually mowed on good lands four times a year, and its yield is very heavy. It is almost universally fed green, though it makes excellent hay—as good as timothy; and the "grama" is superior to clover for grazing, and is as easily killed with the plow. Again, although corn does not do so well in some localities, especially on the coast, as in the States, yet they have a substitute in sweet potatoes and mandioca which more than compensates for any deficiency in the corn crop; and as the value of these crops may not be properly understood by the reader, I will say of the sweet potato that it grows to a perfection and with a readiness here unknown in the States. Potatoes may be planted almost any time, and, like noxious weeds in other lands, when once in a piece of land they will continue to grow there with half a chance. I have found potatoes on more than half the land on my farm where they have been planted at any time within three years past, and I am daily plowing up more than I have use for, on lands where I did not suppose there were any.

Mandioca is the corn of all Brazil—or, in other words, it is as universally grown here as corn in the States, and is used almost precisely as corn. It is made into bread for man, and is good and wholesome when well prepared, and is eaten by everything on the farm, just as corn is in the States. When first taken out of the ground one of the best varieties is poisonous, but after a few days' exposure to the sun and air, to dry it a little, all kinds of stock eat it freely and safely. It is not more trouble to raise it than corn, but takes longer to make a crop—twelve months before it is large enough to use; but it is more profitable to leave it two or even three years, as the yield is thereby greatly increased. It is very nutritious and very prolific. An acre of common fair land will make from one hundred to five hundred bushels of roots, if well cultivated. It is quite as easy to gather as corn, as its roots usually grow almost on the surface, and I do not consider it much more trouble to gather and prepare for bread than I do to gather corn and prepare it for bread.

Now put all these facts together, and the reader will see that it must be an easy matter to secure a living here; and when we add that the variety and the unfailing abundance of fruit that grows in Brazil is such that it makes the comforts and luxuries of life quite as easily obtained here as anywhere else in the world. I do verily believe that if the same lazy, thriftless hoe culture, which is common in Brazil, was the dependence in the States, one-third of the people would starve in three years.

5. Commercial advantages.—These are accessible to a large portion of the empire, but many fine districts are as yet inaccessible.

6. A good government and a good population. Add these to the other five items, and we have, when all are combined, as good a country as we can find in this evil world; and all these, except the last item—the population—I am sure are to be found here. To our people the language and the religious faith of the Brazilians constitute a material objection; but if these were out of the way, I have no idea a more desirable country could be found. But the reader must not infer from this last remark that there is any danger of trouble here about religious freedom; on the contrary, I do not apprehend the least danger of that kind. What I mean is simply this: to us, as Protestants, it must be a serious objection that almost all around us in this country are Roman Catholics, from whom we differ widely on many very important points of faith. Yet I do not attach that importance to this subject which many do, and with the general absence of those of like faith with myself, I still prefer Brazil as a home for myself and family to any part of the world that I have seen; and if all the woes that hang over the desolated and ruined land of my nativity were removed, still I think I should live and die in this beautiful and lovely country.

There is one peculiarity in the seasons here to which I wish to call special attention. It is this: I have not yet seen a rain fall that was at all calculated to wash the lands, or beat them hard, and "run the land together," as planters express it. Thus far the rains have all fallen with a gentleness particularly favorable to crops. To-day is the 23d of November, and is the end of the second "rainy month," so called, and this gentle fall of rain is of such great advantage to us here that one good plowing and hoeing of a crop of corn—the land having been previously well plowed—is, I verily believe, equal to three in Alabama. And this is one, indeed the chief, reason why crops are made here without work. Until one tries it, and sees for himself, he can have little idea of the immense difference this makes in the culture of a crop, and, indeed, in the productiveness of the land.

I have now been on my farm a little over two months, and if what I have seen this spring (it is spring season here) is anything like a specimen of what is common in this country, I shall not seek for a home in any other land. This is, all things considered, as good as any I could hope to find.

Your's in Christ,

J. E. NEWMAN.

From the Methodist Protestant.

An Editor in his Own Grave.

The editor of the New York Examiner and Chronicle—the leading Baptist journal of the country—in his issue of the 12th inst. amuses himself at what he imagines an embarrassment besetting those "who believe that sprinkling is a scriptural way of baptism." Read the following editorial, which we give in full:

"BURIAL BEFORE DEATH.

"Those who believe that sprinkling is a scriptural way of baptism are not a little embarrassed by those passages in which baptism is compared to a burial. There is no denying or evading the fact that the Apostle Paul, in Romans VI. and Colossians II. does teach that our baptism is a symbolical burial. But our Pedobaptist brethren, even if they could succeed to their own perfect satisfaction in explaining how the Apostle came to use so strange a figure of speech as that of calling the sprinkling of a few drops of water upon a person a burying in baptism, would still have accomplished only half their task. They would still have to justify themselves against the charge of premature burial. It is the 'old man,' according to Romans vi: 6, that is first crucified with Christ, and then buried with him. Until this old man, this body of sin, is actually dead, it is not ready for burial.

"Now evangelical Pedobaptists do not hold that the old and depraved nature has died in the young children whom they sprinkle. So that even if it were possible to express by sprinkling the true sense of the word baptize—which it is not; and even if sprinkling had any resemblance to burial—which it has not; they would still be unable to justify themselves in giving burial to those who are confessedly not yet dead.

"Sometimes we are told that when those who are baptized in infancy are afterwards converted, and so come to have both the inward reality and the outward sign, it is of no consequence which they had first. But this illustration may help to convince those who use this plea that the order of these two requirements is as imperative as the requirements themselves. Death and burial are appointed for all men; but it is not immaterial which comes first. Regeneration and baptism are both divine requirements; but it is not immaterial which comes first. We do not bury the living in the pious hope that they will die afterwards; we ought not to baptize the unregenerate in the pious hope that they will be Christians some time or other.

"There is a time to die, and a time to be buried; and the times cannot be rightfully or safely interchanged. There is a time of regeneration, and a time for baptism; and the times cannot be rightfully or safely interchanged. The living know that they must die and be buried; but they have a right to insist that the burial shall not antedate the dying. And since the little ones cannot speak for themselves, we speak for them, and insist upon their right to die before they are buried—to be converted before they are baptized."

The "old man" to which reference is had in Romans VI. is doubtless, according to Baptist and Pedobaptist exegesis, the sinful nature—the moral depravity—the old Adam—the unregenerate soul. This "old man," according to St. Paul's delineation, is "dead in tresspasses and in sins." Not dead to sin, but dead in sin.

Now "evangelical" Baptists hold that little children are depraved in their moral nature; in other words, that their "old man" is "dead in sin," and therefore they must be regenerated—made alive in Christ before they can be baptized, since "we ought not to baptize the unregenerate in the pious hope that they will be Christians some time or other."

That is to say, that our New York editor not only refuses to give "symbolical burial" to little children which are dead in sin—unregenerated—but waits until the dead are alive—regenerated—and then absolutely "buries them alive." Now our cotemporary will please bear in mind "that the order of these two requirements is as imperative as the requirements themselves. Death and burial are appointed for all men; but it is not immaterial which comes first. Regeneration and baptism are both divine requirements; but it is not immaterial which comes first. We do not bury the living in the pious hope that they will die afterwards." With what hope, then, do Baptists make this interment? If not "in the pious hope that they will die afterwards," i. e., die after they are buried; do they bury the living in the pious hope that after they are buried that they will still continue to live—to live buried alive? Why, it is bad enough to bury a live man "in the pious hope" that death will soon release him from his sepulchral sufferings, but to bury the living in the pious hope that they will continue to exist, and endure the miseries of subterranean life, is a strange sort of piety to us. But our Baptist friend does not only bury the living in the pious hope that they will not die, but he refuses sepulture to the dead, i. e., children dead in sin. To deny burial to the dead is an indignity to our common humanity, which we feel sure would not be wittingly offered even by our neighbor of the Examiner. He can sit on either horn of this dilemma in which his own theory has placed him. We would suggest that one which would occasion the less embarrassment, and afford the better opportunity to justify himself against the charge of reversing "the order of these two requirements." If the children be dead in sin—they ought to be buried. Hence according to the Baptist idea that Baptism is "a symbolical burial," we bury them "in the pious hope" that by and by Jesus will "raise them up to walk in newness of life." Unlike our Baptist friends, we do not wait until the children are converted,' that is, "living"—and then bury them. Our theory is bury the dead, for the dead only need burial. But for humanity's sake do not bury the living and absolutely refuse sepulture to the dead.

If the editor of the Examiner has been baptized according to the Baptist mode of dealing with the living, why he is buried alive.

Our sympathies are aroused.—Aroused in behalf of our friend up there in New York. And, "since the interred one cannot speak for himself, we speak for him and insist upon his right" to be buried alive.

"Carve not a line, raise not a stone,
But leave him alone in his glory."

SPURGEON.

BY BISHOP KINSLEY.

Mr. Spurgeon is one of the celebrities of London. Probably more strangers go to hear him than to hear any other hundred men in the city. Long before the doors are opened to strangers the immense portico of the Tabernacle is crowded, and the flight of steps, which will hold a good congregation, and all the way to the street. I should think as many as a thousand strangers are in waiting, many of them for a long time before the doors are open. The members of the congregation go in by side doors through a gate; but a policeman guards the entrance against others. At precisely a quarter to eleven the doors open, and the scramble for seats begins. The seats are arranged in elliptical form, and there are two tiers of galleries all round the audience-room. To accommodate these it requires that the pulpit, though it cannot be called a pulpit, should be high. There is nothing but the circular railing and a small, plain table. The audience-room will hold from four to five thousand people, and every possible seat is occupied, and still people are standing in the aisles. Mr. Spurgeon begins exactly at the time, with a short prayer, followed by a hymn, which he reads a verse at a time, and the whole congregation sings with a will. The preacher does not allow of choir singing. There is no instrument of any kind in the church; but the effect of four or five thousand voices (every person is provided with a book) is inspiring and grand. After the first hymn, the preacher reads a chapter and comments upon it. Then follows another prayer much more elaborate than the first; then another hymn. The preliminary service occupies one hour. Then a sermon follows of forty-five to fifty minutes, followed by a very brief prayer, and the service is concluded.

What is the secret of his marvelous popularity with the people?

I went to hear him, as many others have done, with a view of satisfying myself on this question. My conclusion is that several particulars, which I will describe, go to make up the cause of Mr. Spurgeon's wonderful success as a preacher, for his success is wonderful.

There is nothing remarkable in the appearance of the man. A stranger would pick out a hundred other men in the congregation for celebrated preachers before he would take him. He has been described as a large man. This is not correct. He is below medium height, stout, and a perfect picture of health. He looks more youthful than I expected. His looks do not indicate anything extraordinary in any respect. A large mouth affords a good outlet for his thoughts; but many a mouth as large affords only an inlet for beef and beer. He is not a man of extraordinary learning, though he is respectable. A multitude of preachers in London are vastly his superiors in this respect.

1st. He gives evidence of deep and consistent piety—a fervid, longing, yearning after God seems to be the atmosphere of his soul, accompanied by the bright sunshine of God's presence in the heart. He impresses you that he is a truly humble man. Many a man would have his head turned by seeing five thousand before him every Sabbath, attracted from all parts of the world by his popularity. All this seems but to deepen his sense of his own weakness, and to lead him to cling more closely to the cross of Christ. His prayers are simple, fervent, and confiding; he seems to ask nothing doubting. He is not a profound commentator, but seizes the practical heart-searching ideas of the chapter upon which he comments, and commends them to the consciences of his hearers.

2d. He is a man of the people and for the people, and whose sympathies are with the people, and he is a man of large sympathy. He impresses you that he is your friend, and longs to see you saved, and is willing to make any sacrifice which may be necessary to this end.

3d. In his preaching, as in his reading and praying, every word is heard by every person in the great congregation. He has a good voice, and an excellent audience-room. In his preaching, praying and expounding, every word is understood. He uses no words that a well informed child will not understand. Logic is not his forte. He depends mainly on illustration, and in this respect is very happy.

An excellent mother, in writing to one of her sons, on the birth of his eldest son, says: "Give him an education, that his life may be useful; teach him religion, that his death may be happy."

Rev. Wm. Say, on one occasion, expressing the inconsistencies of his people, said: "If I were to see the devil carrying some of you away bodily, I could not say, 'stop thief,' for I could not be sure that he did not have his own property."

The New Year's Gift.

Before the library fire, almost hidden in the great arm-chair, Arthur Lee sat thinking on the last day of the old year, wondering what New Year's gift he should purchase for his father. "I'll buy a new inkstand. That will be just the present to give father;" and springing from his seat, Arthur put on his cap and overcoat, and after emptying his purse upon the table so as to be certain that his half-crown had not slipped away from his purse, he left the house feeling almost rich enough to buy his father any present he might desire, and smiling as he recollected the time—not very long ago either—when a sixpence seemed such an immense sum to spend at once.

It had begun to grow dark, and Arthur hastened on till a brightly lighted shop was reached, where he felt certain the best inkstands could be obtained, and in a few minutes he stood before a case containing the desired article in great variety. "This one is five shillings, and that three," said the shopman. Arthur's half crown, which had appeared such a large sum, seemed suddenly to have grown very small, and he asked if they had any lower priced ones; but when some were shown him just like those the boys use at school, he left the shop feeling greatly disappointed.

Tea was upon the table upon his return, and he had no opportunity of consulting with his sister as to what had best be done, for several hours. When his father left the room, the door had scarcely closed before Arthur commenced his story. Bessie sympathized most kindly in her brother's disappointment. After thinking a short time she asked, "Do you remember, Arthur, what father broke a few nights ago?"

Arthur thought for a moment and then exclaimed, "You mean the paper-cutter, and I can buy him a new one. I will run out and buy one now, before the shops close. It will take but a few minutes, sister." Arthur returned with a paper-cutter which did suit their father exactly, although it was neither elegant nor mounted with a deer's hoof, like some Arthur had seen in the shop. After having rolled it up carefully and then unrolled it again several times, to try how it would cut, and see how it looked, the paper-cutter was at last hidden, so that the father should not see it till the next day.

"Tell me, Arthur, why you are so very anxious to give father a new year's gift?" said Bessie.

"What a question, sister! I am sure it would be strange if I should not wish to do so, after all his kindness to me. I want to show my love in some way, and has not done more for me during the year than any one else?"

"Not more than any one else, though father has been very kind to us during the year, there is One who deserves more of our love than even he. One who has kept us in health throughout the year, when many have been laid in the grave. One who has bestowed upon us the choicest of blessings, and to crown all other gifts, has offered us at last a glorious home in heaven. O my brother, when thinking of this, sleep peacefully on the night of the old year with no gift for his heavenly Father?"

There was a silence for a moment, and then Arthur said, "Yes, I know God has done more for me than any one else; but what is there, sister, that I can give God, when everything in the world belongs to him."

Bessie did not speak, but taking the Bible from the table, found a verse, and Arthur, bending over, read, "My son, give me thine heart."

It was not the first time Arthur had seen those words; but never had they impressed him as when on that last night of the old year he thought of his happy home, loving friends, the many joys of the year that had passed, and then of the little he had done for God, who had done so much for him.

Alone that night, Arthur watched to watch the old year pass away, and as the bells rang in the new year, kneeling he offered his sinful erring heart to his heavenly Father, but gave it in child-like faith and love, knowing that it would be made pure in the Saviour's precious blood, and in his strength resolved to lead a new life through the year.

And dear reader, have you a gift for Him who has done so much for you in the years that have passed away?—no gift, as this new year dawns, for Him who, to crown all other blessings, offers the "gift of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord," and in return for this asks only "Give me thine heart." It is not much to offer. Only a sinful, erring heart. But if it be given now to the Saviour, this year will be a very happy one to you.—Children's Friend.

LETTER FROM VIRGINIA.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
Abingdon, Va., Dec. 25, 1867.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps a compend of news items from this beautiful mountain region of Virginia may prove interesting to yourself and readers. Occupying, as we do, a sort of locum medium between the tobacco region of Eastern Virginia, where slaves formerly abounded, and the cotton growing States on the South, where a still greater number of Africa's progeny dwell, we have thus far escaped many of the anxious cares which have beset the minds of our Southern brethren in other localities. A feeling of security is also entertained as regards the future, which is favorable to active enterprise. The district of country extending from Harper's Ferry, in the extreme northern portion of the great and fertile valley of Virginia, to Chatanooga, in the southwest portion of Eastern Tennessee, is populated almost wholly by whites. A very small minority are negroes.

This irregularly continued valley, varying in width, is nearly five hundred miles in extent, from northeast to southwest. Being more or less undulating in its whole extent, sometimes indeed hilly and mountainous, it abounds in springs of fine water, has a changeable but healthful climate, is settled by industrious yeomen, a large per cent. of whom, from long habits of industry, have rendered themselves independent of hired labor, the lands yielding almost all the cereals, fruits, and vegetables necessary for the sustenance of the people. There has been, since the close of the war, [illegible] want felt by any in this [illegible]here being no one crop, as in Eastern Virginia, or co[illegible]he Gulf States, upon wh[illegible]y exclusively for aid and [illegible] failure in any one crop [illegible]erely felt here than a failur[illegible] cotton crop in the South [illegible] felt. There can scarcely [illegible]pen, therefore, such a gene[illegible] of crops in this region as will reduce the people to great straits for a living. Besides, the country has great recuperative energies, much of the land producing grass spontaneously. Stock can be raised in great abundance, and fattened at small cost.

If, therefore, the cereals, or any considerable per cent. of them, fail, the people fall back on their grazing interests, and evoke from them a competency. This feature of the country was strikingly manifested during the recent war. Armies traversed this region in all directions; barns overflowing with wheat and other grains were committed to the flames; apparent desolation marked the track of these contending forces; famine seemed inevitable. Still the people had plenty. This was the secret of their plenty: upon the approach of a hostile force the live stock was spirited away to the mountains with wonderful facility. There were few negroes to betray its place of concealment. With the disappearance of the armies the stock returned. God again sent the rain and sunshine. The grass, unconscious of the tread of the invader, rovived; beef and butter and cheese were again in great abundance. Some few barrels of flour carefully hid away in the woods or outhouses made their appearance again; the children had food plentifully. Had the rest of the South been as hard to starve as this valley, some other means of subjugation would have been necessary, involving more of personal risk to the enemy.

It does seem to me that the advantages of this region are such as to preclude the necessity of men's exiling themselves from the South to seek homes in Brazil or other tropical countries. True, lands are high, but they are productive. It is true men who owned their thousands of acres in the Gulf States could only own their hundreds here. But what matter. If the culture of one acre here is more remunerative in products than the culture of five or ten there, less labor gives a better income. There are fewer laborers to feed, less trouble in their management, and more certainty of at least a competency. Besides, these lands are susceptible of improvement, carried to almost any limit, while many of the lands of the Gulf States—and we presume this is true in a greater or less degree with all tropical lands—are of a light arenaceous character, little adapted to the reception of fertilizers, and still less to their retention. Here a man may build and plant for life, and for his children after him. If the increase of population here necessitates a subdivision of the lands, the capacity of these same lands for the support of this increased population may be increased. With increase of population, therefore, comes higher development.

One of two things is obliged to happen: either these lands will be bought and settled by men from the extreme South or from the free States. Already Germans are pouring into the lower valley—a race patient, industrious, and thrifty in a material point of view, but intellectually phlegmatic, sceptical in matters religious, exhibiting no pride of taste in the few houses of worship among them, and content with the most meager educational facilities for their children. This may seem strange when we remember that Germany is emphatically the country of learning and learned men. The problem is solved, however, if we remember that the learned men of Germany do not exile themselves from their fatherland in search of material good. For a half century past the spawn of a pauper population, suffocating in the densely populated cities of Europe, has been drifting to this shore. The offspring of these debris of European society are in some respects superior to their sires; but it will take a century yet to develop them into a Christian and intellectual manhood. To the high-born native Virginian the true gentleman of Southern birth and education would be a far more welcome immigrant than adventurers from beyond the seas, or emissaries from the land of isms and innovation. Oppression in Europe is by the property holders and against the poorer classes. Hence immigration from the East brings labor, ignorance and depravity. The government of the United States is perhaps the first, in modern times, that seeks to oppress wealth, intelligence and refinement in favor of a corrupt and corrupting mixed mob of blacks and whites. The discrimination in favor of ignorance and against intelligence is rendering many portions of the South uninhabitable by men of refined feelings. To these intelligent and refined people, exiling themselves voluntarily from all they formerly loved and held sacred, and seeking new homes where the hate and malice of the oppressor may not find ready at hand so many implements of torture, we extend a cordial invitation to come and make their homes among us, and help us to form here a society which shall be in some sense a refuge for the cultivated from the persecutions of ignorance and fanaticism. Many of our people here want to divide their farms, and thereby promote development in this region, but we do not wish to divide them with those who will make this beautiful region also the scene of contention and strife. Give us here the wealthy and intelligent gentlemen of the South to aid us in moulding the educational and religious interests of the country, and no spot on earth will afford finer facilities for human happiness and prosperity. Having lived myself for several years in the South I am satisfied that the production of cotton, the great staple of the South, with hired labor, is at an end. From $3 to $5 per month is the highest wages any planter can afford to give the best hands, and use their labor in the production of cotton. It is not the worm, it is not dry seasons, it is not even low prices of cotton; it is indifferent, irregular and unreliable labor, at an exorbitant prices, which is ruining the South.

In Cherokee, Georgia—the best portion of Georgia—I undertook to make last year a field of corn with hired labor. Seventy-five cents per day was the best terms I could make with laborers. In many instances the board of the laborer was worth more than his earnings. Result: Expended $150 on twenty acres of corn; sold the entire crop on the ground for $100. Some of my neighbors did worse. They turned the stock on theirs, without gathering. I assert, it was not to dry season, though others said it was, that caused my failure. It was a want of labor. Indeed, Mr. Editor, not only in the South, but everywhere, the labor question is the all absorbing one. Agrarian views are being propagated. Demagogues teach the poor, black and white, that a more perfect equality is attainable by all. Laborers everywhere are becoming dissatisfied with reasonable wages. Capital is of no use without opportunity to combine it with labor. Scarcely anywhere in the South can it be so combined without ruinous loss to the capitalist. The intelligent, before the abolition of slavery, prophesied diminished wages to the white man in the event of emancipation, because of a superabundance of labor, and a decrease of capital, seeking combination with this labor.

The struggle has come. Laborers, white and black, are struggling to breast the current, and to keep up wages by refusing to work. Capitalists are being ruined by yielding to this cry for more wages, and the more prudent are desisting from all efforts to combine their capital. The result is already near at hand. Enterprise is at an end now. Business will awhile stand still, laborers will refuse to work and cry out "oppression of the poor." The longer they refuse to work the less will be the capital of the country seeking union with labor, and the lower will wages go. Hunger and starvation, invariable concomitants of indolence, will follow. Bread riots will ensue. The strong arm of the government will be necessary to suppress the riots. Too late men will learn that it is a dangerous thing to put sharp weapons in the hands of children.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

INDIA. — Twenty-five Protestant missionary societies are laboring in India, and support in that country upwards of 550 missionaries. The amount of money expended in India for evangelizing purposes is annually about $1,250,000. The India government expends every year, in secular education, more than $3,500,000. In British India, including Burmah and Ceylon, there are upwards of 190 native missionaries, 1,550 native churches, 50,000 native communicants, and at least one hundred thousand native boys and girls receiving Christian instruction. A wonderful work has been progressing among the Shanars, near Travancore. They constitute the laboring class, and the majority are poor and ignorant, but many of the converts are men of intelligence and influence. In their heathen state they are worshipers of devils, praying and sacrificing to them to avert their anger. There are among them at this time 466 communicants, and about as many candidates. The amount raised among them last year for the support of Christian ordinances was $4,840. They have 240 separate congregations and 249 native helpers, of whom 11 are ordained, and 18 labor as evangelists. There is a growing vigor and earnestness among the converts, and decided advancement in all the elements of strong and independent Christians and churches.

ENGLAND.—The Colenso controversy has assumed a new phase, on a point raised by Miss Burdett Coutts. This lady gave to the bishopric of Capetown the chief portion of its endowment, and her solicitor has notified the parties in interest that whoever may be appointed to supplant Mr. Colenso will find it his first act of duty "to relinquish an endowment which the founder provided with a totally different intention;" which is rather stunning to all concerned, and which threatens practically to make this lady the final court of appeal. The Church Times is furious, and denounces Miss Coutts as "making a route about her beggarly money that would have discredited Shylock lamenting for his ducats."

From the Southern Review.

THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

In ten thousand ways, and from the very dawn of civilization, have men been at work on the outside of society; just as if they did not know that its life, its power, and its freedom must come from within. In striking contrast with all this superficiality and folly, is the sublime procedure of Him who spake as never man spake, and who acted as never man acted. His reform begins with the very heart of society, and works itself out upon the surface. Though he found the world full of governmental abuses, He sought to bring those powers themselves under the glorious dominion of truth and justice and mercy. Though His kingdom is not of this world; yet, for all the kingdoms of this world has he planted principles and powers which shall gradually work out all their abuses, and mould them into better and still better forms. His eye is ever on the perfect, on the absolutely beautiful and right, on the radiant image of all good; yet, in the pursuit of this infinitely grand ideal, we see none of the stormy violence, or impatient weakness, of human reformers. On the contrary, passing by, with superhuman silence, the great external abuses around him, he addresses himself directly to the great heart of humanity, without the renovation of which external changes are of no avail. Instead of cutting off one tyrant here, or crushing one abuse there, he seeks to enlighten the understanding everywhere, to purify the affections, and to fashion the will aright, in order that all abuses and tyrannies may die out of the world, and disappear from among men. In one word, He aims to make society all glorious within, in order that she may put on such external form as best becomes her glorified state. And in all this we scarcely know which the more to admire, the calm energy with which He works, or the God-like patience with which He waits.

His divine power, silently working through all ages, is fitly symbolized only by those stupendous agencies which, with such inconceivable grandeur, are at work on the magnificent theatre of the material universe. He is, indeed, called "the Sun of Righteousness." In the beautiful words of the poet, "it is no task for suns to shine." The great sun above us, for example, just pours down his golden floods over all as gently and as quietly as a sleeping infant breathes. Yet, it is by their pervasive force that all the mighty changes of the earth are wrought, and all its wonderful harmonies produced. The winds are raised, and, in their rapid flight, obey this subtle force; and the deep seas, shaken by the feet of the mighty winds, oboy the bidding of the sun, and, with all their ever-rolling waves, resound his praise. It is by his touch that the electric equilibrium of the air is disturbed, and the lightnings proclaim his power; and the magnificent sparks thus kindled, ploughing vast regions of the atmosphere, engender material to enrich the earth and feed the green herb. The sun's rays are, indeed, his ministering angels, sent forth to minister to all things on earth. By their ministry it is that the waters of the great deep are spread in vapor through the air; that the secret fountains of the dew and the rains are replenished; and that the dry land is gladdened with springs and rivers. As from the water of the ocean they fertilize the earth and cool the hot air; so from elements of the crude and formless air itself they rear the living plant. The vegetable kingdom of the globe, with all its countless forms and orders, is the more than magical result of their beneficent care. They build the giant oak over our heads, and weave the sweet violet at our feet. The forests of a thousand years, no less the flowers of a day, are the work of their delicate fingers. The endless variety of rich grains also, and all the delicious fruits of every clime, are but so many transmutations of the invisible air, wrought and matured by these ever busy alchemists of the sun, by these shining ministers of material good, who, under God, fill all the earth with food and gladness.

Nor is the solid globe itself exempt from the transforming power of the sun. All the stupendous coal strata of the globe — those inexhaustible sources of power and wealth and comfort laid up for human use in the bosom of the earth — are but the entombed vegetable kingdoms of the past; all of which were reared and ruled by the mighty sun. The slow transformations of the earth's solid crust, too, in which its chief geological changes consist, are almost entirely due to the abrasion of winds and rains, the alternations of heat and frost, and to the everlasting lashing of the sea-waves; all of which are produced and set in motion by the action of the sun. In like manner, the great oceanic currents, by which the matter thus abraded is transferred to its final resting place, are mainly owing to the sun. And when we consider the immense transfer of matter which, through the long lapse of ages, is thus effected, we can well understand the declaration of scientific men, that the sun's rays have, in some portions of the globe, bound down the elastic force of the subterranean fires, and prepared the way for their upheaval in others, either in the form of mountain ranges or in the outburst of active volcanoes; thus bringing even these tremendous phenomena under the same great law of solar influence. The Alps and the Appenines were, in fact, determined by the sun. Nay, when the primeval waters first rolled away, and the dry land rose to view, it was the sun which had appointed the place of emergence, and the form with which it should appear. Thus, by the silent and all-pervading action of the sun are the valleys exalted and the very hills brought low. The foundations of continents are laid; their outlines and features determined; and their surfaces adorned with ten thousand forms of animal and vegetable life.

It is not without a deep significance, then, a wonderfully deep significance, that the great Reformer, or rather the great Transformer, of the moral world, is called "the Sun of Righteousness." The nations on which he does not shine still sit in the region and shadow of death. He acts, not like the "material god" on particles of matter, but on immortal minds. As, under the influence of the one, all the forms of nature spring into life and beauty; so, under the other, thoughts wide as the universe, and hopes more imperishable than the stars, are called into existence. As, by the one, the dry and shrivelled seed is changed into the stately plant and crowned with bloom; so, by the other, the dark, degraded, savage mind is transformed into "the image of God," and made the heir of eternal blessedness.

In the moral world however, as in the natural, the plans of the Almighty require ages for their development. In neither should we expect to see mountains removed in a day. If, in the formation of the earth, He labors through the awful periods revealed by geology, in which the rise and fall of Alps and Appenines are comparatively transient phenomena; then surely we would not expect Him to complete the far nobler and more enduring formations of the moral world in a day or a century. Hence we should learn, in imitation of our Divine Master, to wait as well as to work.

Under his guidance, however, we may be assured that the world will steadily progress. If it be true, as some allege, that the moral and political world is, like the natural, doomed to a perpetual vicissitude of night and day; yet it must be conceded that, all things considered, each night has been less gloomy than the preceding, and that each day has risen on the world with augmented splendor. The elements of progress have, no doubt, been made to fluctuate by the mutability of human passion; yet, under all the agitations of the surface have they struck their roots deeper and still deeper into the moral nature of man. The waves may have rolled back, but the ocean is deeper than its waves. Even the dark ages, as they are called, contained more germs of moral and social good than either Greece or Rome could ever boast. If we read history aright, we shall not fail to discover, even in those ages, the pulsations of a stronger and a warmer humanity than ever beat under all the external splendors, or amid all the intellectual refinements, of Grecian or Roman civilization. We shall not, in one word, fail to discover the living, and therefore the growing, germs of a higher moral, social, and religious civilization than any portion of the heathen world had ever witnessed. The middle ages were, in fact, the chrysalis state of the world, in which it put off the effete civilization of the past, and put on the never-fading civilization of the future.

There have been, no doubt, dark eddies in the great stream of the world's progress. But this stream has, nevertheless, continually flowed on, gaining in depth and breadth and beauty. The dark eddies, of whirlpools of destruction, in which the folly and madness of human reformers have come into conflict with the great stream of the Divine purpose, have neither defeated that purpose nor rolled back the course of its resistless tides. And here, in the civilization of the Christian world, has the design of the Almighty attained an amplitude of development, and a marvelous combination of glorious results, to which there has been no parallel in any other portion or age of the globe.

There are those, indeed, who deny this benign influence of Christianity. But their denial grows out of a most microscopic view of the mere details of history. If they will only sweep, with telescopic vision, the vast outlines of history, they may easily perceive the fallacy of their objections. We do not see, nor can we discover, the law of gravity in the atoms floating on all sides around us; yet is that law most assuredly there, and everywhere, exerting its silent influence amid all the influences of the earth. This sublime law is, however, magnificently unveiled in the celestial spaces. In like manner, although we many not happen to see, or be able to discover, the transforming influence of Christianity on the individuals around us, we have only to direct our attention to the great outlines of history to behold the benign power of that mighty influence. It is, indeed, only within the range of that influence that the condition of man is bright and cheering, while all beyond is darkness and decay.

The progress of Christianity is the progress of man. Hence the civilization of the modern world, unspeakably the best ever seen, has, under the influence of this religion, sprung from the barbarism of the German forests. During the same period the people of Arabia have, under the influence of the Koran, declined from the pinnacle of power and greatness to the comparative insignificance and misery of their present condition. Bagdad was the Athens of the world at the very time that Europe was emerging from its primeval night. The progress of Christianity is, then, the emancipation, the freedom, and the civilization of the human race. No greater mistake was ever made, no more grievous blunder was ever committed, than the placing of this religion on the side of the despotism.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

PARIS, Dec. 20.—The Moniteur of this city publishes this morning later details of the recent battle on the Parana. It seems, according to this authority, that Lopez, the Paraguayan general, by neglect and inactivity not only lost the results of his real victory, but was turned on by his vanquished enemy and badly beaten.

CHARLESTON, Dec. 29.—Gen. Canby has issued an order officially announcing that the Convention has been carried in South Carolina, and appointing Charleston as the place, and the 14th of January as the day for it to assemble.

A Washington special speculates thus: There are several highly important cases about to come before the Supreme Court of the United States, each of which will test the constitutionality of the reconstruction acts. One case, the trial of which is expected to begin very shortly, will decide the question as to whether Virginia is in or out of the Union.

It is confidently believed that the decision of the court will be that Virginia is not now and never has been out of the Union, in which case the situation in the Southern States will be materially changed. The President, it is said, will then instruct the military district commanders to act in strict accordance with the decision of the highest tribunal of the nation, and permit the civil governments to resume their functions, untrammeled by the military power.

It is the belief of a prominent Senator here that a majority of the Supreme Court, when the McArdle case comes up, will decide that the reconstruction acts are unconstitutional; that Chief Justice Chase will deliver the minority report, and make the most of the opportunity to champion the acts, and identify himself yet more earnestly with the Radical party North and South. If the bottom should thus fall out of the schemes for Africanizing the Southern States, it is believed Gen. Grant will reject any nomination coming from the Republican party.

The above piece of news seems to present a new way of escape from the political situation of the country. We insert two other items which give important suggestions in regard to the Radical future:

The Anti-Slavery Standard, the organ of the extreme wing of the Republican party, announces a movement on foot, to secure a Presidential nomination for Gen. Butler. The dissatisfaction at Grant's continued reticence is spreading almost as fast as his popularity did a few weeks ago, and from present appearances a split upon the Presidential question at the Chicago Convention may be considered as almost inevitable. If Butler really throws himself into the contest he will prove no inconsiderable opponent, both to Grant and Chase. With the shrewdest of political cunning he unites all the perseverance of Grant and the pecuniary weight of Chase. More than this, his coup d'etat in placing his record on the greenback question outside the pale of the Republican party may possibly render him, when the time comes, the most available of all the Radical candidates in the field. We shall see what we shall see.—N. O. Times.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 11, 1868

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

Notice to Subscribers.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscribor receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

TO OUR AGENTS.

We have as much money outstanding in the hands of agents as we can at present afford. We are therefore compelled to adhere to the policy of putting down the subscriber's name only when accompanied with the money.

What are bees that make no honey?
Send a letter with the money.
Names are good, but money better;
Send the money in the letter.
Send the letter and the money;
What we want is honey, honey.

CHANGE OF POST OFFICE.

The preachers will greatly oblige us by giving immediate notice of any change in their address.

SELMA, ALABAMA.

We have received this week, in one letter, forty-five new subscribers from this enterprising place. But no city is greater than the men who compose it. One "poor wise man" in the days of Solomon "delivered a city" and made it famous. So of Selma; the Rev. C. D. N. Campbell lives there; and he has raised the reputation of the place—in this office—to the zenith. We never did receive so many subscribers from one agent, at one time; no, not in the palmy days of "Auld Lang Syne." Such an agent has in him the elements of success in every department of a Methodist preacher's work. These were veritable flesh and blood subscribers—no mere shadows—every one had the money in his hand, and had a good shining expression in his countenance.

One honest day's labor is all we ask from each of our agents. Get up leisurely on a Tuesday—eat a good breakfast—saddle the horse leisurely, take a copy of the Advocate and start out; and go on, allowing one hour for dinner, until dusk. "Salute no man by the way," excepting to know if he will become a subscriber to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. That would be a hard day's work. But do it, and return at night with the delightful consciousness that you have honestly tried to sustain the paper of the Conference.

CONFERENCE INSTITUTIONS.

Several communications upon the condition and prospects of our schools and colleges appear in this number of the Advocate. They came to hand about the same time, and tell the same story of reduced attendance, narrow incomes, and immense losses. This contrasts strikingly with those crowded halls, and those generous endowments which before the war evidenced the high appreciation in which Southern Methodists hold sound scholarship and thorough mental training. The war fell at no point more heavily than upon the various foundations and schools of the South. We state this roundly, because we wish to make one sufficient exhibit of the list of our losses, to call attention to it, to put it on file, to make all solemn assertion that may be required of us in further confirmation of the truth, the whole truth, and then—quit the subject forever. And, as we would not be turned into salt, or in any other way become incapable of motion, we do not wish to look back upon the blackened waste where once every form of wealth aspired toward heaven. Many a man has paralyzed his mind and heart by endless rounds of unavailing regret and complaint; and a Church may do the same thing. We should learn from the elastic French the force and art of starting from the present as if we had never known anything better than the present; that is, as they express it, "accept the situation." "Having done all," we can afford to "stand." We uttered all the protests, in all imaginable forms, against fanaticism and radical republicanism long ago. It was a misfortune, doubtless, to be born on a rock, to be suckled by a wolf, and cradled with a bear, but what son of "Liberty" can decide upon what earth, or under what sky, or in what family he will be born!

We therefore dismiss that past; and ask, Where are we? In regard to education, which is the matter now in hand, we find that our Church is possessed of admirable seats of learning, with imposing structures, ample halls, considerable land, and which, in the main, are free of debt. These colleges and schools are surrounded by warm friends, and are convenient to thousands of families anxious to educate their children. They are ably manned with experienced professors. Besides, the South is full of highly educated men and women, capable of teaching—a larger proportion of thoroughly accomplished persons than any other population of whites in the world can show. Here are some of the conditions necessary to the establishment of Universities. Why can we not have hundreds of students in these halls, as they have in the European schools and in those of New England? The cost of living here is as low as it is in New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania or Massachusetts. Why not? We have as fertile soil, and more of it to each inhabitant; our food-producing power is immense. Both grain and cattle can not only be produced but more easily produced by us than by any other people, from the virgin strength of our lands, and the mildness of our climate. We can do more; we can produce our own clothing without additional labor besides that employed in the grain crops.

Yet the trouble comes from only one quarter, and that is the cost of keeping a youth at these schools. That it should cost the extravagant sum of $500 per annum is enough to break down all the interest of colleges. Suppose that forty students are at an institution at this annual expense; this would amount to $20,000 in the aggregate. Cannot one see at a glance that it would cost but a small part of that sum to feed forty young men a year?

In four years $80,000 from forty students! This would be not only enough to feed them, but to enrich four professors. Suppose that we have one hundred students instead of forty; that would be $200,000. Yet that is the scale of the expense upon which it is said our colleges must be sustained or fail.

Students must be boarded in a common hall, and can be, at a moderate sum. Why should it cost any more to feed a student than it does to feed a soldier? The ration of a soldier includes meat, bread, coffee, tea, salt, vinegar and sugar. Young men who rightly appreciate an education can stand that fare to obtain it. And that fare can be afforded at $10 a month. So that for one hundred and fifty dollars per year a student can be supported at college and his tuition paid. We speak what we know: it has been done, and that too in war times. To be more explicit. A college was run in 1862 in this wise—

The President of the institution was also commissary; he had for his use a large mess hall — capable of seating one hundred and fifty boys—he bought crockery, hardware, provisions, hired servants, and at the end of each month divided the cost of the whole by the number of students. We cannot speak positively without the records — but believe when the number of students was seventy-five the cost of board and tuition was $17 per head; when one hundred it was $15; and over one hundred it came as low as $14. The cost of a daily ration for a United States soldier is about 31 cents; which is $9 30 per month. Add to this $4 for tuition, which makes $13 30 per month. Seventy cents from each of one hundred students will hire one cook and two waiters—making the cost per month for a student at college $14. Thus a college can be administered so as to cost a student per annum not more than $150.

When our people know that their sons can be educated at a reasonable cost, then these colleges will be filled. It surprises us that no one of our enterprising educators has grappled with this matter at this end of it. By reducing the expense of board a certain and reliable source of success can be created. Cheapen that cost by establishing a college boarding hall, hire a meat cook, and a bread cook, and a gardener, and divide the actual expense of food each month among the boarders. If it be expected that every five or six students shall support a family as well as themselves, our colleges will remain empty; and their professors will expire of inaction. What we want is a "Black Broth College" where students will have only a plenty of beef, soup, bread, and onions for the first course, and Latin, and Greek, and mathematics for desert. Who will have the good sense to "accept this situation?" Or, are we to stand on dignity, and regrets, and habits which were formed in the midst of wealth, and suffer our youths to grow up uneducated, and thereby add to the misfortunes of a noble people that greatest of all calamities, a generation of ignorant children? The college President that brings the expense of living within limits which bear some just proportion to the times and to the poverty of our people will presently see himself surrounded by crowds of students. He will make no money, nor will anybody about him, but he will live himself, and be hailed by the whole church as a benefactor.

The Virginia Conference.—The statistics of this Conference are as follows: Traveling preachers, ordained and unordained, about 175; white local preachers, 154; colored local preachers, 4; white members, 36,006; colored members, 1,021; adult baptisms, 1,225; infant baptisms, 811.

Sabbath-school Statistics—Number of schools, 436; officers and teachers, 3,834; number of scholars, 20,966; volumes in library, 53,931.

The figures may be relied upon as accurate. Of the white members, 5,300 are in North Carolina and 350 in Maryland. It will be remembered, of course, that the Virginia Conference territory does not extend north of the Rappahannock river nor west of the Blue Ridge mountains. Nearly or quite as many thousand Methodists are embraced in the Holston, West Virginia, and Baltimore Conferences as in the Virginia.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE PROSPECT FOR 1868.

The mind begins already to peer into the probable events of 1868. It seeks for some patch of sunlight among the thick mists, to take an observation and ascertain where we are at upon this dark uneasy sea. Here and there one may see a cloud-rift. The fifty thousand Ohio utterance is a little clear sky; so are the forty-three thousand preponderating second sober thoughts of New York. A gradual waking-up everywhere to the intrinsic folly of the 1776 manifesto of human rights—equal capacity and political equality—is another open place. Other revulsions in public opinion might be cited in evidence that forces are at work and increasing which will soon sweep away the last refuge of extreme radicalism.

The past year has witnessed a revival of the party and power which for a long period of time governed the country. We believe that thousands of those who have never had any sympathy with that party admire the bold and straightforward policy which the Democrats pursued at the recent election. They made no compromise, called men and things by their right names, welcomed the aid of all moderate Republicans, and triumphed upon the broad strength of the Constitution. Such a victory gained in an open fair field, is the harbinger of a swift conquest and of salutary change in the entire control of the government.

Every department of industry must feel the necessity for such a change, and will derive a healthy impulse from the mere prospect of it. That insanity of legislation which has, in less than two years, destroyed the greatest agricultural and commercial monopoly ever held by any one nation, must soon become apparent to the dullest and most narrow observer. The want of bread and a general bankruptcy will be traced in a right line to the true cause. And the indignation of a century will not exhaust the rage and contempt of a ruined nation toward the Sumners, or the Greeleys, who for the sake of obtaining place and power have subverted the Constitution, placed the liberties and rights of millions of white men and women at the mercy of Military Dictators, and have by the utmost violence broken up and destroyed the entire social and industrial economy of the land. To see the vast product of the great export of the United States transferred forever to the most grasping race of merchants and statesmen the world ever knew; to see it presently become the chief item of the wealth of Great Britain, will awaken a cry and anguish only less than the fall of Babylon.

And just here we confess is our hope, that the financial losses of the country will work out a political rescue and a re-establishment of the Constitutional law of the land.

It was impossible to maintain our cotton supremacy without entailing upon our children the weight of the institution of slavery, including a mass of thirty-two millions of negroes, all within the period of the next sixty years. Those slaves would require the most fertile lands, and the institution of slavery would have secured to them the choice valleys of the cotton belt; or may be at some more distant time the question of emancipation would have been settled only to throw upon the body politic thirty millions of freedmen instead of three millions. Just here we may see the goodness of that Providence who anticipates with paternal solicitude and infinite wisdom the wants of the generations of our children. That cotton supremacy has passed away in order to give us products and industries more varied, less engrossing, and equally as well adapted to the support of life and the advancement of our happiness. The Father of all, who feeds the birds of the air which have no store house, and who clothes the lily of the field with more than royal splendor, can and will provide amply for the necessities of his own children, while the very pressure of our needs may bring us nearer to his bosom.

"A Declaration" by Divines of the Episcopal Church.

We find a "Declaration" printed in the editorial columns of the Churchman and the Episcopalian, which speaks out with refreshing distinctness the opinion of thousands of the communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The editor of the Episcopalian says, in a comment upon this "Declaration:"

"It savors of earnestness and determination. It will have weight mainly from the truth stated, and will prove itself to be the opinion of multitudes in our communion.—The declaration has already been signed by a surprising number, and when it is presented to every clerical and lay member of our Church we may anticipate a large and influential roll of signatures which will command, as well as deserve, the respect of brethren who differ. Very little is asked, and that is asked in a courteous and fraternal way. But if there is sincerity and consistency in those who claim and assert that our Church is comprehensive and provides for the largest liberty, what is asked cannot be refused. If reason, good-will, and a Christian spirit prevail, the things are as good as done. Canons will be modified or repealed, and perfect fraternization with all who preach Jesus Christ in truth, and love him in sincerity, will be exhibited."

The subscribers to the following declaration, deeply moved by what they believe to be the present dangers of our beloved Church, in the open and secret tendencies which exist in it to conformity with the Church of Rome, and humbly trusting in the guidance and blessing of the Holy Spirit, would make this statement of their views and feelings, for the purpose of mutual encouragement and support.

The essential principle of these tendencies is an entire subversion of the Protestant and Evangelical character of our Reformed Church. It transforms the ministry of the Gospel into a priesthood; baptism into a magical rite; the Lord's supper into the sacrifice of the mass; evangelical liberty into bondage to manifold observances and ceremonies; and the one Church of Christ, "the blessed company of all faithful people," into the body of those who recognize and conform to a mere sacerdotal system.

These tendencies, already far advanced in England and this country, are materially aided by a subtler and less clearly pronounced sacerdotalism, which finds expression among us in an exclusive view of the Episcopal Church; in unscriptural conceptions of the sacrament; in superstitious ideas of the power of the ministry; and in a legal rather than evangelical view of the Christian life.

The influence of these tendencies we believe to be eminently injurious to our Church, by the reasonable prejudice which they excite; fatal to the performance of the great mission of our Church in this land, by their contrariety to true liberty and the true progress of the age; dangerous to souls by their hiding of the free grace of the Gospel; and dishonorable to Christ by their substitution of human mediatorship in the place of the "one Mediator, Christ Jesus."

Under a deep sense of responsibility, we ask ourselves what, in in this crisis, it is our duty to do?

In the first place, we feel compelled to affirm that in many of the pulpits of our Church another Gospel is preached which is not the Gospel of Christ. The Church needs to be awakened to its peril. A paramount duty is imposed upon our clergy and our missionary organizations to see that, so far as they are able, the pure word of God shall be preached everywhere in our land. We cannot yield this liberty and obligation to any claim of territorial jurisdiction, and we hereby express our sympathy with the resistance which is made, in this respect, to the attempted enforcement of false constructions of canonical law.

We believe also that the present crisis of Protestantism demands a higher degree of sympathy and co-operation among the various evangelical bodies into which we are divided. An exclusive position, in this respect, we hold to be injurious to our own Church, and inconsistent with our history and standards, as well as with the spirit of the Gospel. In the case of those "chosen and called" to the work of the ministry by those "who have public authority given unto them in the congregation," and manifesty blessed in their labors by the Holy Ghost, we believe that we cannot withhold our recognition of the validity of their ministry without imperiling the interests of evangelical religion, "despising the brethren," and doing "despite unto the Spirit of grace." In this matter, also, we express our earnest sympathy with the resistance which is made to those false interpretations of canonical law by which this recognition and fellowship would be restrained.

This statement of our views is made under a full sense of any responsibility which it may involve. The love and devotion which we bear to our Church; and the allegiance which we owe to Christ, will not allow us to hesitate. With kindness and charity for all who differ from us, imposing no burden upon the consciences of others, as we are unwilling to submit to any imposed upon our own, we claim only that in the Church of our dearest affection it is our inalienable privilege to be true, in these respects, to our sense of duty to God.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Washington, Jan. 7.—Howard's Stanton report takes the ground that Stanton favored the reconstruction acts, while the President evinced a disposition to disregard them, and even to seize if possible the reins of absolute power.

This startling purpose on the part of Johnson constituted the real difficulty between Johnson and Stanton.

Stanton had a legal right to refuse to resign, and the circumstances justified Stanton's actions.

The report combats all of the President's positions, placing the President in the light of a false accuser, and closes with the resolution that the Senate do not concur in Stanton's suspension.

The report impeaches the President's veracity regarding the New Orleans riots.

Washington, Jan. 6.—Senate.—A memorial was presented favoring a steamship line hence for Liberia.

One by Sumner from the freedmen of Elizabeth City, N. C., stating that the land owners were driving them from the lands their industry had purchased, and asking redress.

The cotton tax came up and was postponed until to-morrow.

The anti-contraction bill came up but was postponed, with the understanding that it comes up immediately after the disposition of the cotton tax bill. Adjourned.

House.—A variety of bills and resolutions were introduced, among them: To create a local steamboat inspectors' office at Cairo, Ill.; to make St. Joseph, Mo., a post of delivery; to authorize Clerks of Courts of Record to administer oaths in bankruptcy.

Upson, of Michigan, introduced a resolution directing the committee on reconstruction to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the several Constitutional Conventions elected under the reconstruction acts, in the States lately in rebellion, to appoint all civil officers, whether State or County, in said States, to act temporarily and until the State constitutions shall be adopted therein, and officers shall be chosen and qualified to fill said offices; and that for this purpose said Conventions may remove all civil officers now acting in said States, etc.

Boutwell, of Massachusetts, moved to amend the resolution by adding: "to instruct the Reconstruction Committee to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the General of the army to detail officers for service in said States; also to inquire into the expediency of constituting said States each a separate military district under the command of the General of the army, and also as to the expediency of providing additional legislation to secure the elective franchise to all, and also to declare by act of Congress that the provisional governments set up in said States by order of the acting President are not republican forms of government.

Upson accepted the amendment.

Chandler, of New York, moved to lay the whole subject on the table. Not agreed to. Yeas 28, nays 66. The resolutions were then adopted.

Eldridge offered a resolution of thanks to Gen. Hancock, in accordance with the President's message. Tabled, 86 to 28.

Washburn, of Wisconsin, offered a resolution declaring that the House utterly condemns the conduct of Andrew Johnson, acting President of the United States, for his actions in removing the gallant soldier, Gen. Sheridan, from the command of the Fifth Military District, and that the thanks of the House are due Gen. Grant, for his letter of August last, condemning the act of the said acting President for his removal of Secretary Stanton, as well as for the indorsement of Gen. Sheridan in relation to affairs in the State of Texas. Adopted. Yeas, 82; nays, 23.

A bill making eight hours a day's work passed.

THE STATE FAIR.

We give below an extract from the Times' account of the opening:

Mr. I. N. Marks with brief formality announced that the Second Annual Exhibition of the Louisiana Fair Association had begun, and introduced Rev. Father Reculon to the throng which had gathered from all parts of the grounds to the vicinity of the arena.

The Reverend gentleman addressed his audience in the French language, speaking earnestly and eloquently, warmly commending the enterprise which had been inaugurated by the Mechanics' and Agricultural Association, and propheeying ultimately that merited success would attend their efforts.

At the conclusion of Father Reculon's address, Gen. Hancock and Gov. Baker having arrived, were escorted to the stand by the committee, and after being introduced to the clergy, were seated on the right and left of Bishop Odin. The appearance of the eminent soldier, as well as the reference subsequently made to him in Judge Eusti's address, were the signals for prolonged and hearty applause from the audience. After a musical interlude, Mr. Marks then introduced J. Eusti, Esq., the orator of the day, who delivered one of the most appropriate and elegant orations it has ever been our lot to listen to, preceding with the statement that we now stand upon the threshold of a destiny and must be guided in the future to a great extent by the lessons of the past, he proceeded to show how up to 1860 slavery had permeated every social governmental and industrial institution of the South, and was the foundation of our entire wealth. With its destruction, and the new future now dawning, new conditions and responsibilities arise and must be met. In 1850 Louisiana, the speaker said, produced 297,000 hogsheads of sugar, and 722,000 bales of cotton. From 1850 to 1860 its increase of wealth was only one-third to that of any State in the Union. In wealth of farming implements and machinery, Louisiana only ranked the third State. He then paid a high tribute to the qualities of the people, developed by the war, showed that they possessed in an eminent degree all the qualities necessary to assume and discharge the responsibilities of the dawning future. The latter he depicted in the most hopeful and glowing colors, stating that, with the patriotism that is being rekindled by the wisdom and magnanimity of our new military commander, a marked reform might be anticipated in government, in which case the tide of emigration must sweep into our shores, where it would receive a cordial and open welcome, closing with a deserved compliment to the members of the committee, whose proud prerogative it was to wave the golden wand of hope over the destinies of the people.

The choir rendered, in an admirable manner, the glorious Magnificat, at the end of which the benediction of the venerable Archbishop Odin concluded these highly interesting ceremonies; and thus was the second exhibition of the Mechanics' and Agricultural Fair declared open.

The Strawberry.

Any deep rich soil which will afford fine crops of corn and potatoes is well adapted to the cultivation of the strawberry. To be uniformly productive it must be deeply trenched, either by the spade or double plowing, and well enriched with manure. Fine crops, it is true, may be obtained without trenching, but not in such excellence, profusion or certainty in all seasons. It rarely, but sometimes happens that the soil is made too rich. The usual error is the reverse. Deep cultivation is a most essential requisite. The runners must be kept down by hoeing, or treated precisely as weeds; unless the soil is already quite fertile a dressing of manure should be applied each autumn, which will protect the roots, soak into the soil, and may be turned under in the spring. A light top dressing of leached ashes is highly beneficial to strawberry beds. Early in the spring is the best season for setting out strawberries. If the work is done well they will bear a moderate crop the same season, and a heavy one the next. The best plants are the well rooted runners from last autumn. They should be well taken up, so as to secure all the fibres, lifting the plant out with a spade and shaking the earth carefully from them; if pulled severely by the hand the roots will be torn off. The older and dead leaves should be cut from the plants, and the roots trimmed to about two and a half inches long.—American Fruit Culturist.

Two century plants are now in full bloom in New Orleans, and, say the papers of that city, attract great attention.

OBITUARIES.

SUSAN D. MILLSAPS, wife of Elijah Millsaps, was born in Copiah county, Miss., April 25th, 1836. Married October 16th, 1854; died October 16th, 1867.

Such is the brief record, so far as dates are concerned, of a good woman. The history with which these intervals are filled is fondly cherished by loving hearts, and written on high in God's book of Remembrance. The writer well remembers the beautiful September day in 1854, when, after having preached as a Presbyterian exhorter at Pleasant Valley, the church of his childhood, he opened the door of the Methodist Church and Susan D. Granberry came forward as a probationer. Soon afterwards she was married to her now bereaved and stricken husband.

She loved her home, her husband and children, and the duties and labors of it were to her a pleasure and a joy.

Domestic in her tastes, industrious and frugal, attentive and loving to her husband and children, serving God and working righteousness in her daily life and in the social circle, she has left a name to be remembered, and an example to inspire and encourage others.

The blessed promise, "So I am with you always," upon which so many millions now trust for comfort in the dark hour, was again fulfilled, as ever before, and her sickness was full of patience and resignation, and her death in hope of the glory of God.

A husband and five little children cherish her memory and treasure up her winning ways and Christian walk. W.

Died, November 30th, 1867, at his home on the Yazoo river, near Satartia, Miss., MICHAEL HOOTER, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

A member of the Methodist Church for forty-three years, he never an idler in the cause early espoused. Zealous and laborious in the service of the Lord, he was conspicuous for his integrity and religious fervor. Hoary with accumulated years, his life adorned by many Christian virtues, he has passed from among us. We feel that a power for the right is gone, a sacred influence withdrawn. The pleasant memories of his long and useful life, his earnest efforts for good, are yet with us. They cannot depart. A man of rare decision of character, the summons found him ready, and unappalled he passed into the presence of the Master. The benign influence that he exerted in the wide circle of his acquaintances and friends and brethren attests the truth that "he who lives a noble life can never die." It has been well said, "a Christian is the highest style of man." The subject of this notice was a Christian in the truest and best meaning of the word. A reputation so far above suspicion, a record so spotless, may confidently be trusted to meet the approbation of the Most High. All who knew him feel very sure that his home is in the "house not made with hands"—happy in the sight of him whose unadvertied face only the "pure in heart" can see—where are the "spirits of the just made perfect"—those "elders of light" and the Heirarchs around the great white throne of the Eternal King. E.

Died, on the 18th Nov., of intermittent fever, that had become chronic in its character, the Hon. J. M. WHITNEY, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

The social position, advanced years, and long devotion to the cause of Christ, entitle him to more than the usual obituary notice. He was born in South Carolina, in the year 1792, and prompted by that indomitable spirit of enterprise characteristic of the man, the adventurous boy in his teens, overcoming the objections interposed by parental solicitude, emigrated West in company with one of the best families of the country, counting among its members such names as the venerable David McCaleb, honorable while living and revered after death; Thomas Fanar, the amiable and pious man, gone also to his reward, and Mrs. Hankinson, the respectable and Christian lady, the only survivor of those with whom the subject of this notice came to Mississippi, for all of whom he cherished a lifelong friendship that was fully reciprocated. It was fortunate for the young adventurer that at that formative period of his life, thrown out from the paternal roof, he was so intimately associated with those of such sterling worth and whose moral and religious character necessarily exerted a conservative influence upon a young man endowed by the God of nature with true nobility of soul and a most genial temperament. He lived in this family connection for several years, especially in the family of Thomas Fanar, as a citizen of both Jefferson and Claiborne counties. This conservative power, in combination with his own inherent principle, assured the inflexibility of his moral character at a period of peculiar trial and in circumstances of peculiar temptation. He first entered business as a clerk in Port Gibson, and then as a merchant in the town of Greenville, in this county, during the war of 1812. In this vicinity he married Miss Montgomery, of one of the most respectable, talented and wealthy families in the State—the sharer of his joys and sorrows for half a century. Subsequently he was a merchant in Natchez and Washington for about eight years, from whence he removed to his farm near Fayette, where by industry, economy, and that tireless energy which was so distinguishing a characteristic of his nature, he accumulated a large fortune. It was here he developed the attributes of that character we all know and loved so well. He was an honest man, "the noblest work of God." One of his intimate friends and neighbors says his well known integrity secured the indorsement of one of the most influential and wealthy planters of the county, at a trying period of his financial history, that saved his estate from ruin. They were fast friends for life. This attribute of his character secured the confidence of his fellow-citizens, who elected him to the responsible and honorable position of Probate Judge, which he held as long as he could consent to bear its responsibilities and burdens, and no widow or orphan can charge him with extortion in the perquisites of his office; but many, very many, were the gratuitous services rendered to those who felt unable to pay.

He was a true patriot, actively participating in all the measures that he believed to be promotive of the best interests of the country, and generally presided in the public meetings of the county, convened for the general welfare of the country, or the local interests of the county. He was a philanthropist. Here we touch the secret spring of that talismanic power he wielded over the hearts of his fellow-citizens, of his family and of all who came under its influence. He loved his fellow-man. You felt it in the family circle—its warm glow pervaded the hearth stone. It flamed out towards all men. It left the impress of its vitality upon a countenance radiant with benignity, and the impersonation of all those gentle and kindly emotions that flow from its existence in the heart. To adopt the language of another friend and fellow-citizen occupying official position in the county, "nature made him a gentleman." He could not be otherwise, such was the natural suavity and amenity of his manners, flowing from a loving heart. Last and best of all, and crowning his character with a halo of glory, he was a Christian—the highest style of man. For near half a century he walked with God in the communion of the Methodist Church. Although diligent in business, he was fervent in spirit. He was excessively diffident in giving expression to his religious feelings, yet always identifying himself with every interest of the church, and leading in every good word and work, devoting time, talents and his means with a liberal hand for the promotion of every benevolent operation of the Church of God. Although inexpressibly sad to the sorrowing and bereaved members of his family to approach the closing scene of this man of God, yet it is pleasant to contemplate his faith, his calm quiet resignation to the Divine Will, a richer legacy to the stricken heart than all the diadems of earth.

Several months before his death he set his house in order in reference both to his temporal and spiritual interests, and said to his daughter, Mrs. Booth, "whenever it shall please God to call me I am ready." A few days before his death his gin house, containing the greater portion of the year's crop, was struck by lightning and consumed. Not comprehending at first the cause of the disaster, he seemed disturbed, but ascertaining it was the hand of God, a serene smile lit up his face and he said, "that alters the case; if it is the will of God to deprive me of the means for the support of my family, all is right. Though He slay me yet will I trust him." And when the last struggle came, and he was using every means to keep the flickering flame of life ablaze until a beloved daughter should arrive, who was using every exertion to reach the dying couch of that idolized parent, and receive his dying blessing, he asked for the last time if Emily had come, and when assured that she could not reach him before his death, he said, "all's right," and fell asleep in Jesus.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST IN GOLD COIN.

THE BEST INVESTMENT

FOR SURPLUS CAPITAL.

THE ATTENTION OF INVESTors, Trustees, Executors, and others desiring an unusually safe, reliable, and profitable form of permanent investment, is called to the advantages and assurances of the

Central Pacific Railroad

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company offer for sale their FIRST MORTGAGE THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT GOLD BONDS, and submit to investors the following, among other obvious considerations, and invite a comparison with the merits and excellences of any class of corporate securities:

I. These bonds are based upon the most vital and valuable part of the grand National Pacific Railroad, soon to become the main channel of communication on the continent

II. The local settlement and the business therefrom is remarkably large and profitable, and must constantly increase

III. The hardest part of the road is now built, and the remainder will be rapidly carried forward over the Salt Lake plains

IV. The greater part of the means necessary to build the road is provided by the United States Government upon a subordinate lien

V. The State and chief cities of California have contributed upward of $3,000,000 to the enterprise, without lien

VI. The grant of land is destined at an early day to prove of far greater market value than the total of the first mortgage bonds issued upon the road and equipments

VII. The road lies altogether among the gold and silver producing regions, and its revenues are received in coin

VIII. The management of this Company has been distinguished for prudence and economy, and the surplus earnings, after payment of expenses and interest, are devoted to construction purposes

IX. The interest liabilities of the Company upon the portion now in operation are less than a third the net earnings

X. Both principal and interest are payable in gold, under special provisions of both National and State enactment

The bonds are in sums of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in January and July, and are offered for sale at 95 per cent of their par value and accrued interest from July 1 added, in currency

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

These bonds bid fair to attain the most prominent position among the non-speculative investments of the country, and will be actively dealt in at the money centers in Europe

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of ten to fifteen per cent in addition

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return Express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the

MAKE HOME BEAUTIFUL.

Make your home beautiful—bring to it flowers;
Plant them around you in bud and in bloom;
Let them give life to your loneliest hours—
Let them bring life to enliven your gloom.
Make your own world—one that never has sorrowed—
Of music, and sunshine, and gold summer air;
A home-world, whose forehead care never has furrowed,
And whose cheek of bright beauty will ever be fair.

Make your home beautiful—weave round its portal
Wreaths of the jasmine and delicate sprays
Of red fruited woodbine, with gay immortelle,
That blesses and brightens wherever it strays.
Gather the blossoms, too—one little flower,
Varied verbena, or sweet mignonette,
Still may bring bloom to your desolate bower,
Still may be something to love and to pet.

Make your home beautiful—gather the roses
That hoard up the sunshine with exquisite art;
Perchance they may pour, as your darkness closes,
That soft summer sunshine down into your heart.
If you can do so, O make it an Eden
Of beauty and gladness! Remember, 'tis wise;
'Twill bring you to long for that home you are needing,
That heaven of beauty beyond the blue skies

Make your home beautiful—sure, 'tis a duty;
Call up your little ones—teach them to walk
Hand in hand with the wandering angel of beauty;
Encourage their spirits with nature to talk.
Gather them round you, and let them be learning
Lessons that drop from the delicate wings
Of the bird and the butterfly—ever returning
To him who has made all these beautiful things.

Make home a hive, where all beautiful feelings
Cluster like bees, and their honey-dew bring;
Make it a temple of holy revealings,
And love its bright angel, with shadowing wing.
Then shall it be when afar on life's billows,
Wherever your tempest-tossed children are flung,
They will long for the shade of the home weeping willows,
And sing the sweet song which their mother had sung.

A TRUE STORY OF FAITH.

One bright afternoon last summer two little boys of my acquaintance started forth for a ramble in the green fields. They amused themselves for some time with a nice new chain which had been given to one of the boys not long before by his father. But after a while their attention was attracted in other ways; the ripe red berries, the nimble squirrels, the gay butterflies, all in turn absorbed their little minds, and the new chain was left forgotten upon the ground.

At length both Freddy and Weston became tired of playing, and began to think about home, mother and supper, and then they remembered the chain, and began to wonder where they could have dropped it. They looked about eagerly for a good while, but the chain was nowhere to be found. Finally said little Weston, "Let's pray, Freddy, and perhaps that will help us find the chain." So these little boys knelt down and repeated the Lord's prayer, word for word, with the rather indistinct assurance that by so doing they should obtain help from above. They rose from their knees and renewed the search more diligently, but all to no purpose. They began to feel about discouraged, when little Freddie, who had kept up a continual thinking, said, "Look here, Weston, that wasn't the way to pray; we must pray for what we want; if we want God to help us find the chain we must ask him to." So they both knelt down once more, and their little trusting hearts went up to God in a simple earnest prayer, that he would help them to find their missing treasure. And then they again commenced their search. They had gone but a short distance when the lost plaything was seen shining brightly in the green grass. They seized it eagerly and ran home, as fast as their little feet would carry them, to relate to their mother the story of the afternoon's adventures—the lost chain, the prayer, and its speedy answer.

May not children of a larger growth learn a lesson of simple faith from these little boys, and pray for what they want, remembering the promise, "Ask, and ye shall receive."—Children's Friend.

THE ORPHAN AND HIS BIBLE.

The bishop of Carlisle, in a sermon which he lately preached in Exeter Hall, mentioned the following anecdote: "I remember once hearing a little lad in a town in Lancashire, where I first began my work of preaching to my fellow-sinners. He lay upon the steps of the door in the middle of the night, in the great town of Warrington, and the policeman, or rather watchman, coming up to him, said, 'What are you doing here?' The boy replied, 'I am without father or mother; I have traveled thus far, and I have no food, no money, no place to lie down in.' There was something in the boy's jacket which attracted the watchman's eye; and, when he touched it he thought he had found a thief.—'What have you there,' he asked. The boy then put his hand into his pocket, and brought a small pocket Bible. 'Well,' said the watchman, 'if you are so badly off I will give you a few pence for your Bible; I will take it home to my children, and you will be able to get your bed and food for the night.' But the lad, young as he was, knew that the Bible was true; he had an experimental knowledge of the Bible and he was ready at once with his reply, 'Thank you sir, but I won't give it up.' 'Why you are starving,' said the watchman. 'Yes, but this is the word of God, and it tells me, 'When my father and mother forsake me, the Lord will take me up.' Here was the experimental knowledge of the power of the promises. The watchman showed his humanity, his kindness and gentleness toward the fatherless lad. He took him home and fed him; and God prospered that lad who relied on the promises."—The Children's Guest.

SCIENTIFIC.

Miners' Lamps.—Notwithstanding that every English miner who is detected in unlocking his safety lamp is liable by law to three months' imprisonment, the offence is committed with impunity by means of false keys. A simple plan has been invented by a manufacturer of these lamps for sealing them without using any lock. When the staple has been put down over the eye a small leaden pin is inserted in the latter, then being placed under a horizontal press fitted with two dies, the shank of the plug is formed into a head, and both heads are impressed by the dies with any lettering or device.

A Huge Laundry is established in the suburbs of Paris, at which is washed the soiled clothing of the guests of the principal hotels, at the rate of 40,000 pieces a day. The clothing is boiled with soap and soda, and then washed in hollow wheels, rinsed, partially dried by centrifugal machines, and for the rest in hot air ovens, which carry off nearly three pounds of moisture per pound of coal burned, and is finally ironed between polished rollers, and then packed ready for return to Paris.

Life and Death.—It has been estimated that the number of deaths per year throughout the world is about thirty-two millions. Assuming this to be correct, the deaths each day would be about 88,000; 3,600 per hour, 60 per minute, and thus every second carries one human being into eternity. A calculation of the annual births on the globe shows that whereas 60 persons die per minute, 70 children are born, and thus the increase of the population is kept up.

Philadelphia Schools.—Of the total number of 142,517 children between the ages of six and eighteen within the city limits, 53·5 per cent are in her public schools; 17·4 per cent in private and parochial schools; 14·6 per cent at work, and 14·5 per cent in idleness. The children between six and eighteen are usually estimated at 18 per cent of the whole, which would give for Philadelphia a total population of 784,000.

A French Chemist says that thirty pounds of flesh, thirty-two pounds of blood, and sixty-two pounds of bone contain as much nitrogen as one thousand pounds of farm manure; and hence the carcass of a horse is worth more than a ton of the best farm-yard manure for the purposse of vegetation.

It is stated that the Manchester exhibitors did not sell a yard of calico at the Paris Exposition, and not half-a-dozen of the English exhibitors sold enough to cover their expenses. But the Burton brewers made enormous sales.

A Heavy Blast.—Two tons of gunpowder was fired in a mine of the Salt Lime Works Company, Clitheroe, England, and the explosion which followed the lighting of the train resulted in the displacement of about 20,000 tons of stone.

Regeneration slays enmity, and implants in the soul divine love; for we must be regenerate, or we can not enter the kingdom of God. A man must have a new spirit created in him, in which heart and spirit the love of God is the ruling principle.

Power of a Holy Life.—It is reported of an English nobleman not reputed for his piety, that after residing for a time with Fenelon, he said, on leaving his house, that he could stay no longer. If he did he should become pious in spite of himself.

FARM AND GARDEN.

From the Southern Review.

AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY.

* * * There is one very simple law for manuring which, if strictly followed, will certainly keep up or increase fertility. This golden rule is to put on the soil in manure all that is taken from it in crops. In every bushel of wheat, in every bale of hay, in every quart of milk, the farmer is selling his land. It passes away from him imperceptibly, but just as certainly as if a flood were washing it off before his eyes. There is but one way to stop the drain. It is clear that if he puts back as much as he takes away, the condition of his soil will be stationary, or perhaps somewhat improved by the operations of tillage which mix it up and bring the inert substances into more direct contact with the vivifying atmosphere. If he returns more than he removes, he is unquestionably enriching his acres.

There is, of course, some discretion to be used in this matter of manuring. In a soil, the basis of which is limestone, it would plainly be absurd to be anxious about the lime which is removed. Nevertheless the agriculturalist ought not to suffer himself to be deceived by any statements respecting the abundant supplies of certain materials in his land. They may be there, but not available. The man who tills a soil formed by the disintegration of granite, has of course tons of fragments of granite on his farm, and these all contain abundance of potash. This element of fertility, however, is effectually locked up in the granite, and years must pass over before it is brought to a condition in which it can be appropriated by the crops. Meanwhile the cultivated plants are continually drawing it off, and preparing the soil for that melancholy array of old field pines which overshadow so many acres once laden with abundant harvests. There is no wisdom in rejecting any element of fertility.

As however the different inorganic constituents act differently upon soils, and as the mere supplying the materials necessary for the crop is but a portion of their function, it appears proper to pass some of the more prominent of these in rapid review.

Chief in the estimation of all agriculturalists is phosphoric acid. It is usually applied in combination with lime, and the bone phosphate of lime is generally adopted as the standard by which the commercial value of this acid is determined.—Of its indispensableness as a fertilizer there is no question, since it is a most important constituent of the ash of all cultivated plants. There is so much the more urgent necessity also to add it, because all recent researches on soils show that it is always found in very small quantities. It appears to originate from the primitive rocks, in which it probably existed as apatite, though wavellite and other minerals might possibly furnish it.

Besides the manifest benefit of this acid in supplying the actual deficiencies of the soil, it has been thought to exert a physiological action, which is highly important. Thus Ville has shown that the addition of phosphates to the soil increases the quantity of nitrogen which is fixed by the growing crop. In this it simply partakes of the character of all fertilizers, as it supplies the necessary elements of the plant, thus encouraging its growth and enlarging its capacity for absorbing all kinds of food, nitrogen included.

It is applied to the soil in various methods. The popular form is superphosphate of lime. This is specially useful upon light soils deficient in lime. Upon them it acts with great energy and promptness. It is rapidly diffused and readily appropriated by the crop. On a clayey or calcareous soil it is almost immediately reduced to the condition of a neutral phosphate, which is not so active. In the form of bone dust, made from steamed bones, it is united with gelatin to form a compound, slightly soluble in water alone, which is not absorbed by the arable earth, and consequently passes into the deeper layers and may even reach the subsoil. It soon however decomposes, and the phosphate then dissolved is absorbed as usual. The phosphatic guanos are mixtures of various phosphates with small quantities of organic matter. These are all, of necessity, slow in their action, and the denser and more compact they are, the more tardy are they.

Peruvian guano has been generally considered a mere mixture of ammonia and phosphates, but it is much more. The salts of ammonia are peculiar, and exert a remarkable action upon the phosphate of lime. There is much oxalate of ammonia in this fertilizer, which, with the last named salt, undergoes double decomposition, forming oxalate of lime and phosphate of ammonia. Peruvian guano thus exerts the ordinary action of an ammoniacal manure, and at the same time that of a superphosphate. It has this advantage over the ordinary superphosphates, that its rapid solubility is not affected to any considerable extent by the presence of carbonate of lime in the soil.

Common salt and nitrate of soda appear to possess the property of diffusing nutritive matters through the soil. In this manner they increase the action of other fertilizers with which they are mixed. The soda salts seem to act with peculiar energy upon barley, turnips and kitchen vegetables.

Gypsum has long been known as an admirable manure for clover, but its action is not yet distinctly understood. It retards the period of flowering, and greatly increases the crop of stems, while it correspondingly diminishes that of flowers and leaves. In contact with arable soils it disengages a portion of its sulphuric acid which combines with magnesia and potash, so that one of its chemical effects is to distribute these two last named substances through the soil, and bring them within the reach of the clover roots.

The action of lime is altogether too complex a problem to be discussed in a paragraph.

Of the various compound manures, whether natural or artificial, we have nothing to say. It has been our aim to give the general reader an outline of the relations of the plant to the soil, and of both to the elements supplied by manures.—These, fully understood, will enable any one to reason for himself upon the properties of their combinations. In all cases, however, care must be taken to avoid hasty conclusions. A consideration of the extreme intricacy of the changes in the plant, the soil and the fertilizers, should lead to modesty in the expression of opinions, which the experience of one season may prove erroneous. Ville's careful method of feeling his way may be commended to all practical as well as scientific men. He divided the land to be manured into sections, from which four experimental strips are selected. On one of these he puts superphosphate of lime; on another quick-lime; on a third carbonate of potash, and on the fourth nitrate of soda. These represent to him the four classes of manures. The results of this manuring show him what class his soil requires. Now, it is very easy to criticise these details. Nitrate of soda, for example, is not a complete representative of all the azotized manures, nor does superphosphate stand for the whole class of phosphates. Still, while admitting defects in these respects, we can heartily commend his method, as a vast improvement over the old system of soil analysis and quack prescriptions.

THE CHICKEN OVENS.

From one of our exchanges we extract the following from a letter of the Rev. D. A. Randall, now traveling in Egypt:

"Egypt has long been noted for the multitude of its chickens hatched by artificial heat. The eggs are stowed by thousands into great ovens, heated to a degree corresponding to the warmth of the parent hen, and in due time, though eggs are close things, the chickens do come out. This business is still carried on quite extensively. The eggs are placed in large ovens, upon mats or straw, tier upon tier. A building containing from twelve to twenty-four ovens is called a maamal, and receives at one time about one hundred and fifty thousand eggs. A number of years ago an official report to the government gave in Lower Egypt alone one hundred and five of these establishments, using up annually over nineteen millions of eggs, of which about six millions are spoiled in hatching, and from the balance about thirteen millions of chickens are produced. What a privileged class of hens they have in this country! More than a million and a half of them are saved the trouble of hatching their own chickens, and a vast amount of toilsome labor in rearing their broods. They seem to walk about like little aristocrats, for they have nothing to do but lay their eggs and cackle over them for joy."

On Censure.—"For my part," says Rev. John Newton, "if my pocket was full of stones, I have no right to throw one at the greatest backslider upon earth. I have either done as bad or worse than he, or I certainly should if the Lord had left me a little to myself, for I am made of just the same materials; if there be any difference it is wholly of grace."

There is an old tombstone in Dundee, Scotland, which bears this sentence, from Seneca: "It is uncertain at what place death awaits thee. Wait thou for it at every place." More appropriate words could not be graven on the stone that marks a man's last resting place.

Mrs A A Wright, Principal,
Mr R Scott Ricketts
Miss Anna M Ross
☞ Miss C A Murphy, Instructress in Vocal and Instrumental music.
Other Instructors will be announced.

☞ This Institution was founded about 1830, and incorporated in 1834, and has a bright record of usefulness. It has been under the present direction four years. The course of study is a full one, and, upon its satisfactory completion, a diploma will be awarded.

The younger pupils have the same instructors, and receive the same attention as their seniors. Exercises are continued throughout the course, in Penmanship, Elocution, Orthography, the science of English Grammar, the Art of Composition, and Arithmetic.

The buildings are spacious, retired, well shaded, and well designed for Academic uses. PORT GIBSON is noted for its beauty, salubrity, order and good society. Transportation from Grand Gulf will be by railroad in a few days.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.

TENTH SESSION.

The exercises of the school will be resumed on Wednesday, October, 2d, 1867.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education:

Particular care is bestowed on the moral and social culture of the pupils.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a satchel for dirty clothes.

It is urgently requested that Students be prompt in their attendance. A few days absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms: Board and Tuition per session. $360.
Payments.—$200 in advance—balance 1st March.

Tuition of Day Scholars, per session, $75 00 payable—one half in advance—balance 1st March.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the School demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as Teachers, gentlemen of the highest character and ability,

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Doremus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To supply (gratuitously where needed) the Constitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence do they come of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the plus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? Is it cultivating its own local work in the city district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and by employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not, to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S. in founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donations and urging donations, by exploring and relieving the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades, and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church the Board of Directors, representing in its body such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Reformation.—No forbidding of the Word, no tampering with the text: no man's notes or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and copious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, we also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC,

Or, Vegetable Medicine.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has shown very little animation since our last issue, but our leading staple has continued in active request, at still higher prices on Saturday, but easier rates since, the previous improvement having been partially lost under the depressing influence of the foreign news. Sugar and Molasses have also sold readily, at full prices. Tobacco has been nearly stagnant and the movement in Western Produce of limited extent, notwithstanding liberal receipts and more ample supplies.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed on Friday evening firm at 12¼ to 13c, for Ordinary, 13⅛ to 14 for Good Ordinary, 14½ to 14¾ for Low Middling, 15 to 15¼ for Middling, 15½ to 15¾ for Strict Middling, and 16 to —, for Good Middling; since which prices have exhibited some irregularity, advancing fully ½c. on Saturday, but losing most of the improvement on Monday, and ruling yesterday at still easier rates. On Saturday, under the influence of the accounts from Liverpool, factors were enabled to established a further advance of fully ¼c. but operations were restricted by the moderate extent of the supply, sales not exceeding 4,300 bales. On Monday the demand continued active, but buyers claimed concessions of ¼ to ½c. predicated on the unfavorable reaction reported at Liverpool, and 4,000 bales changed hands at prices showing an irregular falling off of ¼ to ½c. the better qualities giving way rather less than the lower grades. Tuesday the market opened at about previous rates, but as buyers claimed further concessions predicated on the discouraging tenor of the New York telegrams, and factors were disposed to meet the demand freely, the sales, which summed up 4,150 bales, were mostly at easier prices, Low Middling and the Ordinary grades showing, in fact, a further reduction of 1-4, while the better qualities were also weaker, but not to the same extent.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 13,250 bales, taken partly for the North, but mostly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 11,722 bales, against 19,035 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 7,313 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 262,497 bales, against 358,166 bales the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 119,184 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 62,784 bales to Great Britain, of 29,269 to France, and an increase of 71,764 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we modify our quotations as follows:

Low	—	to	—
Ordinary	12¼	to	12½
Good Ordinary	13¼	to	13½
Low Middling	14¼	to	14¾
Middling	—	to	15
Strict Middling	15½	to	—

SUGAR.—The supplies are barely sufficient for the demand, which continues good, especially for the better grades of open kettle, and prices have continued to rule with an upward tendency, showing a still further slight advance. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced fully 1,400 hhds., comprising all the offerings, at prices ranging from 7¼ to 15½c., according to grade.

MOLASSES.—The demand has continued active at full prices, and 2,000 barrels, all the receipts, sold at 40c. per gall. for Inferior, 55c. for Common, 65 to 70c. for Fair and Good, 72 1-2 to 77 1-2c. for Prime, and 80c. for Choice.

BACON.—The market is very dull: only a retail business is doing and prices are still lower.

PORK.—The market is very dull and prices have further declined fully $1 per bbl.

CORN.—Quite a fair demand has prevailed at about previous prices, and 9,000 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at 90c. for some in poor order, and 95c. to $1 per bushel for Prime White and Yellow.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,

Have just Issued:

THE FIRST VOLUME OF A NEW

CYCLOPÆDIA OF BIBLICAL, THEOLOGICAL, AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE. By Rev. JOHN M'CLINTOCK, D. D., and JAMES STRONG, S.T.D. With Maps and numerous Illustrations. To be completed in about Six Volumes, Royal 8vo, of about One Thousand Pages each. Vol. I., comprising the Letters A and B, is now ready. The remaining Volumes are in rapid progress, and will appear at short intervals. Price per volume, Cloth, $5 00; Sheep, $6 00 Half Morocco, $8 00.

"The CYCLOPÆDIA OF BIBLICAL, THEOLOGICAL, AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE is in our judgment one of the most valuable works which have been recently issued. For thorough research, comprehensive range, accurate scholarship, and strict fidelity, vastly superior to any work of its class. It is cordially recommended, not only to ministers, but also to all other intelligent Christians."

The Publishers have also received letters highly commending the plan and execution of this work from the following eminent scholars and divines:

Rev. Drs. Leonard Bacon, Theodore D. Woolsey, George P. Fisher, Stephen H. Tyng, H. W. Bellows, Joseph Cummings, T. V. Moore, W. J. R. Taylor, M. B. Anderson, W. H. Campbell, D. P. Kidder, J. P. Popery is a Cunning Compound of Superficial Truth and Solid Error.

BY PROF. J. B. A. AHRENS.

PAPAL SUPREMACY.

There was a time when not only ecclesiastical, but even political supremacy was claimed for the Pope. But, alas for the logic of historical events!

Romanists build their ill-shaped fabric of ecclesiastical papal supremacy on the following three fundamental errors: Peter's apostolic princedom; the uninterrupted descent of this princedom; and, lastly, the descent of the same through Rome. These are bold assertions, and they require, hence, bold proofs. And let these proofs not be like those of astrology and alchemy, preferring the occult to the open, the dawn to the day.

I. Was Peter the Prince of the Apostles? Did he possess prerogatives peculiar to himself? No. There is no biblical or rational proof to substantiate such an opinion.

(1.) But Peter often spoke first, and his name is often put first of the twelve. Right. But why? He was spokesman, doubtless, because of his warm, ardent temperament. He was bold, daring, self-confident. It was this same self-confidence that led him at one time to ignore his Master. The reason why Peter's name is often put first may be found in the fact that he was the first disciple whom the Lord had called. It is also probable that he was the oldest of the twelve.

(2.) Peter received the keys to the kingdom of heaven. We read: Peter had the honor of first preaching or opening the door of the gospel to Jews and Gentiles; to the first on Pentecost, to the latter in the case of Cornelius. But all this implied simply priority in time—certainly not superiority in rank or power.

(3.) "Upon this rock will I build my church." Perfectly so. Upon Petra (feminine) the rock confessed, upon the confession made by Peter, upon "the Christ, the son of the living God," and not upon Petros (masculine) as Peter, the stone or piece of rock confessing, not upon the confessor, but upon Peter the man. Peter said: "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." To this the Lord replied: "Upon this rock, or truth, firm as a rock, I will build my church."

To all this we add that Peter, in his two Epistles, never claims superiority for himself. What! Peter the superior of the other apostles? Was not Peter called to account by the other apostles? (Acts 11: 2.) And does not St. Paul declare himself "not a whit behind, in nothing behind, the very chiefest apostles?"

II. Was there an uninterrupted descent of Peter's princedom? This, also, we flatly and fully deny. Even if Peter had been the supreme, it must have been a personal distinction, and with him the supremacy must have lived and died. The apostolic office died with the apostle; the supremacy was crucified with the supreme head downward. Furthermore. How can we know the real and rightful successor to Peter? What sure criterion have we for distinguishing the right from the wrong, the real light from an ignis fatuus? None at all. Scripture leaves us in the dark. Men write and say much about the identity of the body and the identity of the soul; but the most puzzling of all questions is to determine the true identity of the proper head of all christendom. Were there any such descent of Peter's supposed supremacy, St. John, in the Revelation, would have made mention of the same; yet, though he gave us a prophetic history of the church, on this subject he spoke not.

What do I say? The Bible is silent on the subject of papal supremacy and its regular descent? This is all wrong. The scriptures do allude to the same. We read of the little horn of Daniel, and of the man of sin as son of perdition, of Paul, and of the two-horned beast, the whore of Babylon; in short, we read of corrupt papal Rome. Of this supremacy the Bible is pretty full, and the epithets which it applies to the same are not always the sweetest.

III. Was the descent of Peter's princedom through Rome? Rome answers in the affirmative; but Rome cannot prove its affirmation. Yea, we hold that it is highly questionable that Peter ever was at Rome. At any rate, the New Testament does in no instance say so. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, does not mention Peter. No apostolic father avows it. The earliest writers who speak of Peter having been at Rome make mention of his martyrdom there, but not of his episcopate. Paul calls Peter the apostle of the circumcision. What! and Peter be head minister of uncircumcised Rome? Again: an apostle was a kind of bishop universal, having the whole world for his field.—Hence Peter could not have been stationary at Rome; and if Peter never was at Rome, how could the Roman bishops inherit from him his pretendedly supreme power?

To show more fully that Peter's supposed princedom did not descend through Rome, we adduce the following arguments:

(1.) John outlived Peter thirty years. Now Rome asserts that Peter's supremacy descended to Linus. What! was Linus St. John's superior? The inspired apostle was superior to the uninspired minister: John, the disciple beloved, was not second to Linus. But St. John never was at Rome.

(2.) According to the Bible, not Rome but Jerusalem was to be the mother, the cradle, of Christianity. "Beginning at Jerusalem," (Luke 24: 47.)

(3.) The Popes have often, too often, been foes of moral purity and enemies of mental light. Were they the lords paramount of the entire Christian world, to reign and rule over the souls of virtuous and intelligent men and women?

(4.) Who was the rightful successor of Peter at the time of the council of Constance, Martin V. or one of the three anti-popes? Who was the real Pope, he at Rome or he at Avignon? Supremacy descended through the Roman popedom! Popedom has been gained by political intrigues, by fraud, by farce, by bribery, debauchery, plot, lie, sword—has been bought with money, has been procured by a whore! A man may become a Pope by the influence of his mistress, a lewd woman, and perhaps the wife of another! Among the impious herd of rebels toward God, denominated Popes, where shall we look for the rightful successor to Peter?

Report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals of the Montgomery Conference.

The Committee on Books and Periodicals submit the following report:

1. The Publishing House.—We are happy to learn that this institution is succeeding beyond the most sanguine hopes of its friends. At the last General Conference the attempt at its resuscitation was considered a doubtful experiment, for in addition to the widespread ruin and financial depression of the whole country, it was pressed down by a debt almost sufficient to paralyze any commercial enterprise. But under the judicious management and the indefatigable labors and sacrifices of its agent, the Rev. A. H. Redford, a considerable part of this debt has been liquidated, and its existence and success reduced to a certainty if the preachers and people will rally to its support. It is to be hoped that no tardiness on our part will permit so valuable and so indispensable an institution to the whole church to go down.

2. The Christian Advocate.—This General Conference organ, issued also from the Publishing House, is a sterling sheet, and second to no periodical in the land. Ably edited, sound in theology, and taking a purview of the whole ecclesiastical field, it commends itself to every preacher and member of our connection. It is out of debt, and has a large and increasing circulation.

3. The Sunday School Visitor.—This periodical is published for the benefit of the children and youth of the church, and most nobly does it meet the demand for which it is intended. This also has a large circulation, and promises great usefulness to the church. Let every preacher and every Sunday school superintendent see that every Sunday school and family be supplied with the Visitor, and thus sow in this virgin soil the seeds of eternal life.

4. The New Orleans Christian Advocate.—This is the official organ of our conference, published in the city of New Orleans, whose geographical position renders it very necessary and greatly desirable that an able and well sustained paper be published there representing the interests of our church. Owing to the want of mail facilities its circulation in our midst has not been as great as its merits justified or as we desired; but as this difficulty is being removed, we bespeak for it a much larger circulation in our conference territory. We regret to say that frequent typographical errors mar the paper and present communications in a mutilated form, and we greatly desire that the present editor, or one who wields a pen equal to his, could devote his whole time to its columns and mechanical department, as these are very apt to suffer when other responsible duties claim the services of the editor.

5. The Southern Christian Advocate.—This old and valuable church paper, with a prestige of thirty years, is established on a firmer basis and has brighter prospects than ever. It has a large circulation in the eastern portion of our conference, and we take great pleasure in recommending it to our people as a paper worthy a place in every Methodist home.

In conclusion we respectfully offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to the hearty aid and cooperation of the agent; that in imitation of our fathers, as far as we can, we will buy books and circulate them among our people, and thus, while spreading our own literature, help to liquidate the debt of the Publishing House, and establish it on a sure and permanent basis.

Resolved, That we hereby tender our most sincere and grateful thanks to the Rev. A. H. Redford for his judicious management and indefatigable labors and sacrifices in behalf of the Publishing House.

Resolved, That we feel bound to use all possible effort to circulate and sustain the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Death of Bishop Hopkins.

We copy as follows from the Mobile Register of the 13th instant:

The telegraph, on the 11th, brought us news of the death of the Right Reverend John Henry Hopkins, Bishop of the Diocese of Vermont and Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. The distinguished prelate had nearly completed his seventy-sixth year. He was an Irishman, a native of Dublin, but came to this country, with his parents, in the year 1800. He was educated for the bar, but, before his admission to practice, went into a counting-room in Philadelphia, and afterward engaged in the iron manufacture in the western part of Pennsylvania. Failing in this, after the second war with Great Britain, he was admitted to the bar in 1817, and practiced law until 1823, when he entered the ministry, being then in the thirty-second year of his age. In 1862 he was elected Bishop of the new diocese of Vermont. A few years ago he became Presiding Bishop (by seniority,) at the death of the late Bishop Brownell, of Connecticut.

Bishop Hopkins was one of the ablest and most learned men in the Episcopal Church. His published works are numerous, embracing—besides theological and controversial treatises—a work on gothic architecture, "The American Citizen"—a treatise on the political, social, and religious duties of the citizen; and a great number of essays, poems, etc. He was a man of a vast variety of attainments—a scholar, jurist, theologian, poet; an accomplished musician, architect, and, we believe, a painter also. He was never identified with either the High or Low Church party, but always maintained an independent position in his ecclesiastical views.

During the later years of his life he had devoted much of his time and energies to the establishment of an institution of learning at Burlington, in which, if we are correctly informed, he was entirely successful.

The name of Bishop Hopkins is entitled to special honor in the South on account of the manly stand which he had maintained for many years in opposition to Radicalism and in behalf of the rights of the Southern States. Although no friend nor advocate of slavery, he had always been an active enemy of Northern Abolitionism, and assumed and held a bold and uncompromising position on the subject during a period when it was at no small cost or risk that such an attitude could be maintained by any clergyman in New England—especially in Vermont. During the war he was unswerving in his opinions and unflinching in the expression of them. His memorable letter to certain bishops and other clergymen, on their signature of a paper which was published upon the subject, was a striking instance of moral courage, and involved him in a controversy in which his ability was not more conspicuous than his moderation and courtesy.

The Right Reverend Benjamin Bosworth Smith, of Kentucky, succeeds Bishop Hopkins as Presiding Bishop. He was consecrated on the 31st of October, 1832, at the same time with Bishops Hopkins, McIlvaine and Doane.

MR. TRENCH quoted a saying of old Fuller's: "He that falls into sin is a man; he that grieves at sin is a saint; he that boasts of sin is a devil." My father replied: "Only one thing more—He that forgives sin is God."

OUR homes are like instruments of music. The strings that give melody or discord are the members. If each is rightly attuned, they will all vibrate in harmony; but a single discordant string jars through the instrument and destroys its sweetness.

Musical Education—A Church Necessity.

Can the church expect to find musicians ready made such as she needs? This is a practical question which is growing in pressing importance with the growth of general musical knowledge and taste. We must meet and answer this question. When we desire men educated in any specialty, we at once modify our processes and machinery of education accordingly. When we are opening new territory and building railroads, we insist that engineering shall be more thoroughly taught. When the mineral wealth of the country is revealing itself, we establish "schools of mines." As Europe is brought nearer to us, we insist that the continental languages shall at least rival the classical in prominence in our schools. In other departments, where mere temporal interests are involved, we know how to regulate the supply of capacity and culture; we go to the sources, and there apply our regulating or remedial ideas and principles. But when only spiritual interests are involved, we are by no means so prompt or so philosophical in meeting the demands of the case. We criticise and complain, but do not correct the results by regulating the sources. We complain that we find within the church no adequate supply of educated singers, so that we are obliged to borrow or buy from the world those who have been educated, not for worship, but only for display. The theatre and the opera control musical education, and command a steady supply of persons carefully cultured for their service. But the church has made comparatively no exertion to stimulate, sustain, and guide musical education. She could if she would secure in our schools and in our homes such systems and habits of musical culture as would produce results such as she needs. There is no reason why the present destitution of persons fitted both in character and in culture to lead in the worship of the sanctuary should exist. We might have such supplies as we need if we were wise enough or had principle enough on this subject to dignify music as a branch of Christian education. The popular musical taste has been elevated to such a degree, and has been formed in such a manner by mere worldly enterprise, that our churches are compelled to put before the people better singers than can be found among professing Christians. The enterprise of the world takes advantage of the apathy of the church, and determines the style of music and monopolizes the supply of singers. And this state of things must continue until the church educates her own membership for the service of song in the sanctuary. She cannot trample under foot the musical taste and the musical ideas which have been so widely diffused; she cannot say to her congregations, "You must go backward, because the church has not kept pace with your progress." "Why are they so far behind the age?" would be the ready rejoinder. And the church could reply only, "We have done nothing to educate ourselves or our children for the service of praise." Then the congregation would say, "You have no right to make us suffer from your indolence or neglectfulness; you must permit us to sing for you until you educate yourselves or your children sufficiently to give us choirs that will not be an insult to our taste, a torture to our ears, and an offering of 'the lame and the halt' in sacrifice." If the church would relieve herself of the difficulty which is everywhere felt, namely, the introduction of operatic music and of operatic singers into the sanctuary, she must educate singers for herself. In the days of Solomon, of the thirty-eight thousand Levites, four thousand were set apart to praise the Lord with the instruments of music which David had made. Two hundred and eighty-eight chosen cunning men were "instructed in the songs of the Lord." Where in our modern church-life is there anything to be compared with this? Where are our schools, our Christian teachers, our means of musical culture? The church has left herself absolutely dependent upon the world. Is this right?—T. S. H., in Musical Pioneer.

RABBITS IN THE ORCHARD.—J. L. Jessop, Baltimore Co., Md. The use of blood to prevent rabbits gnawing trees is a Western practice, and there it is found that one application answers for the winter. It is spattered upon the trees by means of a swab, one may be readily made of corn-husks, and tied to a stick.—American Agriculturist.

Archbishop Whately.

The following genial picture of the home manners of this great clergyman and logician is furnished by an English letter-writer:

Every week a luncheon was provided at his residence, to which his clergymen were welcome without form, and to prevent reserve the attendance of servants was excluded; and by this free intercourse, supplemented afterward by a monthly dinner, at which he met the members of the Dublin Association for Discountenancing Vice, he sought to form acquaintance with his brethren, encourage their confidence in him and influence them for good. As a host, he was always courteous and kind; and though the ways of the common room at college clung to him through life, little traits of his real nature always raised him above them.

He never stood upon his office, but he would treat his clergy as his equals in discussion. "He never failed to take especial notice of the greatest stranger," and toward those who entered the lists with him in argument he had the most kindly feeling. "There never was a bishop in whose presence his clergy felt less restraint." "Gentlemen," he would say, "suppose I take the Roman Catholic side for a few minutes, and you argue against me; I should like to hear how you would proceed." Into the debate they plunged, the archbishop standing like one of Ariosto's knights, opposed to a throng, who thrust right and left without being able to make a rent in his armor. Dinner put an end to the conflict, but so sensible were the clergymen of having been left in an awkward position that when we returned to the drawing-room a deputation presented themselves to express a hope that, as he had so powerfully advocated the Roman Catholic cause, he would give the benefit of pointing out what was weak in his arguments and how they ought to be met; and this he did with his accustomed kindness and clearness.

GENERAL HANCOCK'S ORDER TO REGISTRARS IN TEXAS.—It will be remembered that Gen. Sheridan's registrars, in deciding on the qualifications of applicants for registration, professed to be governed by instructions from military headquarters. These instructions were in the form of memoranda, purporting to be issued; but they were, in fact, prepared by the Republican committee, with the object of effecting a sufficient disfranchisement of the white people to secure a radical triumph. The different boards of registration, acting as the willing and efficient agents of radicalism, accepted these memoranda as instructions, and zealously prosecuted the work of disfranchisement. The consequence is seen in Louisiana, in the registration of 82,000 negroes against 44,000 whites, when it is notorious that the white population of the State exceeds the negro population by at least twenty-five per cent. General Hancock now declares these memoranda to be unauthorized, null, and of no effect; and he informs the registrars in Texas, in which State a revision of the lists is soon to take place, that they must be guided solely by the law in their future action. The law requires that they shall strike from the lists the names of such persons as have been wrongfully registered, and that they shall insert the names of those who may be entitled to register at the time.—*N. IS COTTON AN INTEREST?—Senator Sprague, of Rhode Island, the son-in-law of Chief Justice Chase, and himself a large manufacturer, has recently made a remarkable speech in Congress upon the proposed repeal of the cotton tax. In this speech he owned himself forced to the humiliating confession that "the poor, despised Indian cotton is to-day, by the skill and labor of Englishmen, equal to the best fabric the America has yet been able to produce." He further stated that the question before that body "was not whether it should tax an existing interest, but rather whether cotton is an existing interest." To this undeniable fact he attributes most of the present suffering throughout the country, and upon it he bases the prediction of the ruin of New England, through the destruction of her mill interests. That his illustrious confreres from the same section either disbelieved or underrated the imminence of the danger predicted by Senator Sprague is sufficiently demonstrated by their votes in defeat of the bill; but this does not alter the facts.—New Orleans Times.

From Every Saturday.

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS.

They in a manger laid Thee,
Thou Monarch of the sky;
And men no homage paid Thee,
Thou Highest of the High.
While stars proclaimed Thy wondrous ways,
While hosts of angels sang Thy praise,—
Thou camest down to die.

With humblest heart Thou tookest
The lot Thou hadst made Thine:
Heaven's glory Thou forsookest
For huts where poor men pine.
Thou wert a slave to make us free;
It was Thy gladness, Lord, to see
All share Thy grace divine.

Thou, Saviour, wert the meekest—
Thy words gave peace of soul;
And still Thou healing speakest
To all who would be whole.
Hope, trust, a Father mild,
Thou art to each repentant child
That seeks the grandest goal.

Shamed, tortured, lonely, friendless,
Nailed to the fatal tree,
Thou didst by anguish endless
Gain endless life for me.
Now in Thy holy, holy name
Bows every knee—thy triumphs flame
Sublime from sea to sea.

May Thy example cheer us,
Strengthen, exalt, inspire;
May Thou be ever near us;
A sacred mystic fire
Dwell in the temple of our breast,
And when we sink to final rest
Be Thou our sole desire.

"CENTENARY COLLEGE."

Mr. Editor: As a member of one of the "patronizing conferences," I beg leave to say a word in behalf of this one prosperous institution. It is monumental, as its name indicates. Its noble structure speaks the gratitude of a people who had been "raised up of God to spread Scripture holiness over these lands," and who in the fall of 1839 celebrated the first hundred years of trial and triumph in the great Redeemer's cause.

The aggregated thank offering of the Methodist people in the United States was divided respectively between the missionary cause and the cause of education, and interest germain to each. Except so much of the fund collected throughout the connection as was designated for the general purposes of the church, the several conferences were allowed to control the money obtained within their borders, and appropriated it according to their own discretion. The Mississippi Conference, then embracing the States of Louisiana and Texas, as well as the greater portion of Mississippi, determined to found a college. The money subscribed and strength to be availed was ample for the purpose. Trustees were appointed, a charter obtained, the college was located in Rankin county, Mississippi, and continued in successful operation then for several years. Financial embarrassment of the country, and it may be some mismanagement, or an abatement of the zeal of the church to sustain the enterprise, began to operate seriously to its disadvantage. Louisiana Conference was set off, but composed of former members of the Mississippi Conference and friends of Centenary college. They felt it to be a joint interest. In the providence of God the way was opened to plant our standard upon more eligible ground and on a firmer basis at Jackson, Louisiana, still within the bounds of Mississippi Conference, but so contiguous to Louisiana Conference as to be fully identified.

Years of unexampled prosperity attended our college. Scores and hundreds of young men who now occupy enviable positions in society can with pride and pleasure own her as their Alma Mater.

But the desolating storm has swept over her, only leaving her walls prondly standing. Her halls made brilliant once by the light of intellect are almost darkened. Where hundreds of noble young men once daily attended her lecture room, now only a score or two are found. An able and an extensive faculty, numbering from eight to ten men, is reduced now to the lowest number allowed by the charter. Those who still cleave to the fortunes of dear old Centenary, have toiled years for naught almost, rather than see the college fail. The conferences and the church owe them a debt of gratitude.

At the late session of the Mississippi Conference the preachers were called on to pledge themselves each to raise twenty dollars—only twenty dollars!—during the coming year to relieve and sustain Centenary college. Several gave their written pledge to do this, and every member of the conference was earnestly requested to make the effort. With the amount thus obtained and (I am glad to know) the co-operation of the Louisiana Conference we can sustain the faculty, and Centenary college may continue on in her career of usefulness. Will not every graduate of old Centenary respond and help the preacher raise his twenty dollars?—and are there not friends of the church and of the cause of education who will help everywhere?

Alabama sustains two first class Methodist colleges; will not Louisiana and Mississippi try to sustain one?

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference who subscribed twenty dollars, remember that one half of this amount is expected, if possible, by the first day of March next. The money can be remitted to Dr. Watkins, at Natchez, to Rev. George H. Clinton; Vicksburg, Dr. Keener at New Orleans, Rev. W. B. Lewis, Jackson, Mississippi, or to me at Hazelhurst, Mississippi. The subscription list will be left with each of the brethren named above, and you will be credited on receipt of the amount remitted.

Let us try to keep Centenary college afloat till the storm is over past.

The third Friday in July was appointed as a day of fasting and prayer to the Great Head of the church to send forth more laborers into His vineyard.

The conference recommended that one district conference be held every year, in each presiding elder's district, to be composed of all the official members of the church.

Every one has heard of Frederick the Great's passion for playing on the flute, and how, spite of his father's prohibition, he used, on pretence of going out hunting, to organize concerts in caverns and woods, at which he could indulge in his favorite amusement. Quite recently the famous flute on which Frederick used to play has come into possession of the Paris Conservatoire de Musique. The instrument is valuable, not only as a historic relic, but on account of the richness of its ornamentation and its excellence of tone.

To pass through the Mount Cenis tunnel, when it is completed, will occupy over half an hour, and it is for this, among other reasons, that many expect the over-mountain railway—which only possesses a concession for working until the tunnel line is opened for traffic—will have its privileges extended so as to make it practically a permanent concession.

The railway over the Alps is known as the "Fell railroad" from its being constructed in accordance with the patents granted to a gentleman of that name.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We have received a most interesting letter from the Presiding Elder of the Yazoo District, from which we make some cheering extracts:

"A meeting was commenced at Lexington one week before the quarterly meeting, which I think an excellent plan, and was continued after for about a week. A gracious revival was the result, and such a one as that place has not enjoyed for a number of years. Twenty-nine united with the church. I had the pleasure of remaining there but a few days, other duties hurrying me away. A meeting was held in the woods, on the Lexington Circuit, a notice of which has been published, and a church organized with fifty-five members. On the Greenwood Circuit I suppose there have been fifteen accessions. On the Carrollton Circuit there has been a gracious revival at Mount Zion, and an excellent meeting at Eden, and, I think, about thirty accessions. I was not present. There have been some accessions on the Emory Circuit; how many I do not know. The Holmes Circuit has enjoyed several refreshing revivals. The meeting at Durant was quite a success. A church had been recently organized, and an increase of the membership, and about twenty conversions was the result. I was with them a week. It was truly a pleasant occasion. The accessions on the circuit for the year have been one hundred and ten. On the Black Hawk Circuit there have been twenty-seven accessions; on Mount Olivet forty-five; on Richland twenty-seven; on Yazoo fifty-four; and at Yazoo City eight.

"Some of the meetings embracing these numbers have been noticed. The number of accessions on the entire district, exclusive of colored persons, has been about four hundred. I am not able to give the exact number. Within the bounds of the district the interests of the colored people have been watched over by the pastors; and, as far as practicable, the plan inaugurated by the General Conference has been carried out. The church is preparing colored preachers for them, as fast as prudence and the nature of the circumstances will admit. The cause of Sunday schools has not been neglected by the preachers, and we hope lasting good has been accomplished. Collections for missions have been quite small; the impoverished condition of the country is the apology. The conference collection amounted to five hundred and seventy-five dollars. Thus ends another conference year, with all its cares, toils and pleasures. And though we would be much pleased to report a larger number of accessions and conversions, and more prosperity in the financial department, yet we have great reason for thankfulness and devout praise to Almighty God for all that has been accomplished. Having labored to the best of our ability, we leave the events with Him, and with a confiding trust in His sustaining and comforting grace we press on to do battle for another year, on the great moral battle-field of the world. To-morrow I leave for Natchez to attend the annual conference.

"Yours, fraternally,
"J. M. Pugh.

M. E. China Mission Meeting.

The meeting opened October 16, and closed October 22. The services were conducted in both the Chinese and English tongues. Eight student helpers were received on trial, nine were continued on trial, and seven were admitted into full connection. The statistics stand thus:

	Present Year.	Increase.
Church members	341	138
Probationers	113	43
Total members	454	181
Adult baptisms	151	79
Infant baptisms	35	28
Missionary collections	$123	$39
Sunday-schools	11	1
Scholars	251	59

This is an encouraging showing, and will be gratefully received by the Church at home.

PROGRESS.

Progress is, indeed, the sublime privilege and prerogative of man. The beaver, guided by instinct, builds his dam to-day precisely like that of the beaver which issued from the ark of Noah. But how different is that ark from a modern man-of-war, or from one of our majestic steamships! In like manner, the rude huts occupied in the summer season, by the barbarians who overthrew the Roman empire, or the caverns dug by them in the earth for winter-quarters, bear small resemblance to the magnificent palaces erected by their descendants on either side of the Atlantic. Still greater is the contrast between their crude notions of government, or dark undeveloped germs of a social state, and the sublime code of laws and institutions under which we live. But of all the points of difference, the most striking and immense is that which exists between the religion, the worship, and the morals of those shaggy sons of the forest, and the corresponding systems of the present Christian world.

Nearly all this progress has, in fact, been confined to Christendom. During the same period there has been little or no progress in China, the oldest and the largest empire on earth. On the contrary, that vast empire had long before the Christian era cast anchor on the great sea of ages, and there it has remained. Nor has there in all that time been any real progress in India, in Arabia, or in Africa; except such as may have proceeded from the influence of the Christian world, or of Christian ideas. When it is said, therefore, that progress is the great law of the world, the meaning is not that all nations are moving forward in obedience to this law. The meaning is that the States of Christendom obey this law, and that they are gradually, though slowly gaining on the darkness and barbarism of the heathen world.

But all States, it is sometimes said, must grow, decline and perish like individuals; that all civilizations must return to barbarism, and renew their strength to repeat the same melancholy circle. A New Zealander standing on the broken arch of London bridge, surrounded by a vast solitude and sketching the ruins of St. Paul's, is the type and symbol of this philosophy. But what solid foundation has this symbol in the history of the world? History, if truly considered, lends no support to "the ideal circle" of Vico, or to the desponding rhetoric of Macauley. The civilization of Greece, for example, was as brief as it was brilliant. Impelled by her dominant passion, Greece reached "the middle ground of the beautiful," and there displayed all the wonders of her genius and her art. But did the civilization of Greece return unto itself void, or perish by the way side? No on the contrary; it became, as every one knows, the grand tributary to the civilization and power of Rome; and still lives in the civilization of the Christian world.

A still higher destiny was reserved for Rome. Enriched with all the spoils of Greece, and finally modified by the Christian religion, Rome developed for the benefit of mankind the great principles and laws of social order. Nor did Rome, after having run her wonderful career, return unto herself void, or sink into her primeval darkness and barbarism. On the contrary, she laid all the treasures of her wisdom, her knowledge, and her civilization at the feet of Christianity.

The destruction of Rome is beyond all question, the most disheartening spectacle the most awful scene of wide-wasting desolation the world has ever seen, except the flood. If ever in the history of our race the human mind has had occasion to despond, it was when the western empire of Rome was submerged beneath the wild deluge of barbarians from the North. But even there amid the deepest darkness and desolation of the world, and at the very point where all its lights seemed to have gone out forever, the footsteps of the divine wisdom and goodness were clearly seen, as well as of that eternal justice which reigns everywhere among the children of men. Salvian, standing amid the ruins of Rome, and pointing to a more glorious future than the world had ever seen, is the true type and symbol of the real philosophy of history. He was, moreover, no imaginary personage, or figure of speech, but a real living man whose sublime prediction, founded on his faith in God, has already been realized.

Rome, it is said, conquered the world; that is the known world. If so, then was there an unknown world beyond the Rhine, which she did not and could not subjugate. That world, as the event has shown, was made not to be conquered, but to conquer. Long did Rome endeavor to subdue that world, but in vain. The colossal power of her mighty empire had, it is true, cast its dark shadow across the Rhine, and inspired those primitive peoples with a mysterious and awful sense of its greatness. But still they did not shrink from a contest with that power, or submit to its sway. The providence of the Almighty had, indeed, drawn a line near the banks of the Rhine, and said to the conquering hosts of Rome: "Hitherto shalt thou come, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." Varus, with his noble legions, ran against that line, and the bones of his army whitened the forests of Germany. Thus ended the career of Rome, and thus began the dominion of the Teutonic race. Or, more properly speaking, thus perished Rome as a State, and began to live as a principle and a power in the civilization of a better world.

The tremendous and terrible discipline which Rome had been appointed to administer to the ancient world having been accomplished, her mission was at an end. Or rather it then became a part of her mission to undergo a like tremendous and terrible discipline herself. The very germs of morality and religion had decayed and died in her bosom. The hopes of mankind were not destined to be grafted on a race worn out by vice and degraded by atheism. They were actually grafted on their conquerors, the barbarians of Germany.

Perhaps no other race of barbarians known to history ever entertained so profound a respect for woman as those of the primitive German world. Hence there seems to have been a peculiar fitness in the selection of such a race as the germ of the Christian civilization; a civilization which, above all others, vindicates for woman a noble, glorious, and dignified position in the social world. The family, as constituted and governed by the Christian code, is a new power on earth; the centre of mighty influences for the intellectual, moral, and social development of man. It is the high office of woman to preside over and direct this world-transforming power. Neither Greece nor Rome understood her real mission, or felt much of her benign influence. Even Aristotle, by far the greatest political philosopher of antiquity, maintains that children should be taken from their mothers at five years of age, and committed to that iron step-mother, the State.

But aside from all particular proofs or illustrations, the wisdom and the goodness of the selection are seen in the result. In the course of twelve centuries Rome ran her great career; she rose, she reached her meridian height, she declined, and she fell. It has been fifteen centuries since the origin of the great States of the modern world; and yet, at this very day, their civilizations are fresher, brighter, and more beautiful than ever. They have not, as yet, even reached their zenith. Who knows that they will ever perish? It is certain that, in view of such facts, to say nothing of the promises of revelation, we have no right to talk about the ideal circle of Vico, or the iron circle of fate. The very least can be said is, that the destiny of man revolves, not in the same eternal circle, but in a spiral which, instead of returning into itself, takes a broader sweep at each succeeding convolution, and brightens as it expands.

In every society, as in every individual, there is a downward as well as an upward tendency. But is there any valid reason for the belief that this downward tendency must always prevail, and bring every civilization on earth down to the dust? Even if this had been so in all heathen countries, does it follow that the same thing must happen in all Christian nations? We might just as well conclude from the majority of examples that all projectiles must ultimately come to the ground; a conclusion which we know to be false. We know that projectiles may be raised so high, and thrown with such force, as to make them revolve around the earth forever. The moon, for example, launched by the hand of the Almighty, is forever falling and yet never falls, but rolls around our planet in eternal beauty. May not the divine impulse of Christianity, then, give such force to the upward tendency of human society as shall continually resist the ruinous effects of its downward tendency? It is certain that if we would reason from the past to the future, not blindly or rashly, but cautiously and wisely, we should overlook no new power which may have been introduced into history, much less one which has been ordained by the Supreme Ruler of the world for its regeneration and its recovery from the ruins of its primeval fall.

A young Parisian who gives good dinners and writes wretched verses, recently consulted M. Nestor Roqueplan upon his poems, saying, "Illustrious critic, do give me frankly your opinion. Was I wrong to write these poems?" M. Roqueplan read them and then gravely answered, "That depends upon circumstances; did you really write them to save your life?"

THE LONDON TIMES.

We propose to give some account of the leading London newspapers. We have already indicated the place of the Times at the head of journalism. It is a real pleasure to look over its large open-faced type, and to handle its stout sheets. It is printed upon the best paper, each number containing sixteen broad pages, eight of which are exclusively devoted to reading matter, and another also exclusively to advertising. It is sold for three pence, or six cents of our gold currency. If one should subscribe for the Times by the year it will cost him in London eighteen dollars in gold. It is safe to say that no American paper is intrinsically worth half as much as the Times. A paper as truly and broadly American as the Times, in English, as well printed upon good paper, would cost at least thirty dollars per annum to a list of a hundred thousand subscribers.

The Times is reported to have about sixty thousand copies daily. When the revision of the paper tax was under consideration Mr. Delane stated before a Parliamentary committee that it could be profitable for any newspaper to sell more than about this number of copies. The logic seemed to be: "before sixty thousand circulation we can fill our advertising columns at the highest possible rates, and it is only the advertising which is profitable. It is bad policy to run presses in order to make a half-penny upon sixteen pages of inked paper." It is said on very good authority that the annual profits of the Times are approximate $300,000. We may say, by way of contrast, that the New York Tribune published a statement at the close of 1866, showing that its receipts and expenditures nearly balanced, each being about a million of dollars for that year.

The typography of the Times is marvelously perfect. English book publishers weed their pages so clean of errors as do the women on this paper—the ranks of constructed columns of the Times. The type is all set between six P. M. and midnight, and when the paper is published at three A. M. it has all been read and corrected from six to eight times.

The last reading is done by an old printer whose daily task is to read the Times for errors, between midnight and the earliest streak of dawn.

The editorial unity is secured in nearly all London offices by a very simple system. There is an "editor" and a "revising editor," and a sundry gentlemen who write the editorials. The editors never write—they edit. Thus about noon each day editors and writers meet in the office. Topics are selected and distributed among the writers. The leaders must be prepared, presented for type by six o'clock. They are then "set up," and proofs are taken. After several readings, to correct both orthography and sense, they are laid on the desk of the editor, who, aided by the revising editor, proceeds to harmonize one article with another, and all with the role of the Times. Many a literary father fails to recognize his own offspring in the next day's paper.

Similarly correspondents and reporters are instructed and their facts audited. It is commonly understood in London that Mr. George Augustus Sala's war correspondence requires a good deal of selecting—most allusions to the supposed subject having to be written in after the letters reach Fleet street.

It is scarcely just to give the Times any decided political application. It is English. During all the recent reform movement it has advocated a reform measure and is commonly classed as liberal. If it blew hot and cold, alternately denounced and applauded Gladstone, so did England. If it constantly criticised Mr. Bright, and often downrightly abused him, so did educated middle-class England. When the Times said, early last winter, that a reform bill must be passed, everybody understood that the question had been settled—perhaps not by the Times, more probably by public opinion—and nothing remained but to settle how many laboring men should be enfranchised.—N. W. Christian Advocate.

A French Chemist says that thirty pounds of flesh, thirty-two pounds of blood, and sixty-two pounds of bone, contain as much nitrogen as one thousand pounds of farm manure; and hence that the carcass of a dead horse is worth more than a ton of the best farm-yard manure for the purpose of vegetation.

idences of Christianity.—No. 1.

R. EDITOR: I propose, with r permission, to write a series rticles on the Divine origin authority of the Bible. Of rse no one can pretend, at this day, to present much or any-g really new. Almost every sible field of inquiry has been lored. But the results are not wn to the great body even of fessed Christians, much less the ld at large. The body of the ple have neither the time nor mental training for extended ical research. This is espe-
y true of the young. They not read large volumes and treatises on the various evices of Christianity. I have ught perhaps I might be of e service to various classes of r readers in removing the bts of some, confirming the h of others, and furnishing e weapons of defense to such re assailed.

The evidences of Christianity divided by theological writers the external, internal, and nteral evidences. The exterevidences consist in miracles prophecies; the internal in originality, the purity, the sub-ity, and harmony of the scrip-es; and the collateral evices in the confirmations of genl history, of geography and natl philosophy, and of the tendens and progress of Christianity lf. It is easy to see from this ssification that the subject of blical evidences embraces a wide ld of historical and literary re-rch. Of course in a series of rt newspaper articles I can but uch a few of the more salient gles of the great and varied sub-t.

But some young inquirer who not had time to look over the may ask: Did the world need velation? Was its ignorance of great matters revealed in the le such as to render a revelaa necessary and merciful gift
God? A little examination the state of religions knowl-ge in the ancient and modern athen world will leave no doubt on any intelligent and candid nd.

The first and greatest of all cts is the existence and unity of od. This fact is the solution of he problem of the universe. This act denied, or unknown, and all s darkness and chaos. How the niverse came into being, what pholds it, why it exists, no man an tell or even guess. Of this reat fact the heathen world has lways been ignorant. Not that haldea, Egypt, Greece, and Rome id not all make considerable adancement in the arts of civilized ife; but by wisdom (uninspired) ey knew not God. They had ods many and lords many. They hanged the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. Polished and powerful Egypt worshipped dogs and cats, and the mistletoe on the rees.

"And should you leeks or onions eat, no time
Would explate the sacrilegious crime.
Religious nation sure, and blest abode
Where every orchard was o'errun with gods."

The mythological fables of reece supposed the cloudy heights f Mount Olympus crowded with throng of gods—gods celestial nd terrestrial—gods aquatic, aeial, and fiery—gods that repre-ented all vices and presided over ll virtues.

As may well be supposed, peole entertaining such opinions of e gods could have no just conption of eternity, omnipotence, d the omnipresence and omnisience of God. Matter they held s eternal; of creation they had o proper idea, and none of the rigin of man. Heathens could ot tell why man is a sinner, why e sorrows, and why he dies.—
They knew not whether God would hear prayer or pardon sin. They had no clear conception of the immortality of the soul. Many of their greatest thinkers were in painful uncertainty, and hoped the gods would some time impart more light to man.

The heathen of Japan, China, India, Africa, and the islands of the sea are to this day in the same deplorable ignorance.

Upon reflection we must see, no matter how important these questions may be regarded, that men uninspired cannot answer them. They can guess and hope, but they can do no more.

The unity of God revealed seems consonant with the conclusions of reason, but unrevealed, reason can never reach certainty. It is impossible, outside of revelation, to find any clue to the origin, the condition, and the destiny of man. All is dark.

These are all subjects of the profoundest interest and highest possible importance to man; and if so, a revelation was the great need of the human mind. And on the hypothesis that there is an almighty, all-wise, and benevolent God, what can be more rational or probable than that he would reveal himself to man, and at once clear up the mysteries of the past and inspire hope for the future?

NEW ORLEANS, La. W.

From the Sunday Magazine.

ON BEING ALONE.

A few summers ago, when traveling from Turin to Genoa, I became acquainted with an Italian priest of rather a rare type. He was one of a party of three ecclesiastics who joined us at Alessandria, each of whom was a representative man. One was a Benedictine monk from Dalmatia, going to Rome to be present at the canonization of the Japanese martyrs. He was a young, fat animal, heavy in feature, and who, from the description he gave of his duties in his lonely convent, far away among the wild hills and wilder peasantry, must have felt the greatness of the change from a life so monotonous to the world of railways. The second was a thorough specimen of the Signor Curato of a Lombardy village, a modern edition of the Don Abondio, so delicately sketched by Manzoni. Neither he nor his linen were remarkable for their cleanliness. The plain front of his black gown, with its row of small buttons, was threadbare, and at once soiled with snuffing and polished to a shining gloss from the frequency with which the snuff had been rubbed away. Two honest eyes peered away from under shaggy eyebrows, set on either side of a round nose. He had a double chin, a huge three-cornered hat, and a red cotton pocket-handkerchief. He was much given to sleeping, but always awoke to snuff at the different stations, and to utter his "Che!" of astonishment at the tunnels. But the third was a man of an altogether different type. His bearing was that of a gentleman, with a certain winning sweetness of manner and refined tenderness of expression, which at once attracted confidence. We had not chatted long before he opened his heart on what was evidently his favorite theme—early religious art, and the religious life of which it was the expression. "Look," he said, "at those countenances you see in the pictures of Perugino, and Angelico, and Francia: look at those Madonnas of Raffaele: gaze at the still serene loneliness: la dolcezza calma ed angelica, which dwells like the light of another world on the canvas of these great artists. Where could a painter now-a-days find such types of countenance? The spiritual world has now no place in the thoughts of men. Politics, and greed, and chicanery have changed the very features of men. They are coarse and care-worn. Religion is with them a penance, not a life of joy and adoration. Just witness the crowd at this station. What mere earthliness is stamped on every lineament! And yet we hear of nothing but progress! progress! But where is the progress to? If progress means tumult, and money-making, and selfishness, then eccolo ecramente." On conversing further with him we found that his great panacea was the restoration of the old conventual life. In his eyes the fine odor of sanctity was being dissipated by over exposure to worldly influence; and that just as in the rough times of mediæval disorder, the cloisters formed the retreat of all that was refined and spiritual, so now they were equally necessary to save religion from being profaned by secularism. "It is only," he said, "when the soul is calm and self-possessed that it is opened to truly great and pure impressions. I mix in the world, and my ears tingle with chatter about the lotteries, or political intrigue. But when I go to visit my sister, who is a nun near Genoa, ah! what another atmosphere is there! and often too when worried with earthly cares, it is my refreshment to gaze on some picture of an old saint until I drink in the calm spirit of a past age. Ah, signor! we can only attain the type of those old Christians by cultivating the repose in which they lived; we must keep away from these screaming railways!" We tried to give him some conception of what might be said of the other side—of the sacredness of common life, and of the truly religious character of such modern art as that which, without sublimating humanity into æther, yet expresses the motives and struggles, the joys and sorrows of Christianity as actually lived out by good men and women. But it was no use. "La Fede è morta," was his sad criticism on modern life.

For one who had some sympathy with "muscular Christianity," it was an instructive lesson to study and appreciate such a spirit as this; and while it may be easy enough to weigh his errors and to vindicate the healthier creed which looks on this world as God's world, and on the arena of common life as the sphere of noblest duty, yet, I think, we have much to learn in these days of perpetual work—grinding work—as to the necessity of cultivating mental repose, were it for nothing more than for the reception of such holy impressions as visit those only who sometimes "study to be quiet." Muscular Christianity, with its hatred of pretence, its manly vindication of the sacredness of every element in the circumference of human interest, its assertion that whatever is done by a Christian man is a Christian deed, is a fine creed for a brave and free people. This is the religion of action. Let us not despise, however, those who have no muscles, and whose nature is chiefly contemplative. No contrast can be greater than between a bluff English parson, a good man and a good cricketer, and the dreamy beauty of the golden-haired saints painted by Angelico. The one is all thew and sinew; the other has neither; and yet how Christian are they both! Both have their merits and their faults. For, if there is a certain roughness in the strength of the one, there is also a want of force in the sweetness of the other! If the one is too much flesh, the other is too much moonshine. If we would like to convey a little more idealism and repose into the impetuous eye of the one, we, at the same time, miss some firm lines of character in the spring-flower enamel of the other.

But, putting aside the question of comparison between these two schools, is there not much to be learnt by us as to the relation of contemplative to active life? Duty, in the modern sense of hard work, is a defective school for character. The busy man who is perpetually engaged in doing something, whether it be by hand or head, runs a great risk of losing that precious class of sympathies which belongs to the receptive rather than the active side of our nature. Labor and study do not give us all that is best for us as men. The rough hand and knitted forehead, practical usefulness, or the scientific mastery of details, cannot supply some of the essential elements of true greatness. For there is a world of holiest influence around us, which requires little more than passivity on our part that we may hear its whispered teaching. And there is also a corresponding region in our own nature, which, like some fine shell fish, closing itself at the rough touch of earthliness, yet opens under the influence of silence, to receive purest spiritual food. Nay, more; there are convictions of utmost value which do not come to us by dint of reasoning, nor the demonstration of science, but only in the form of impressions. There is much in us of what is best, of which we can say no more than—we have felt it. We have not so much mastered the thought as the thought has mastered us. There are a thousand lessons which come to us through eye and ear, which, if we have but the heart open to receive them, form a better education than half the "useful information" or clever reasonings of the schools. For however great a power knowledge may be, yet wisdom, and reverence, and sympathy with what is lovely and pure, are not learned by proof and rule. Converse with nature, or with what in poetry or art utters best her meaning; the sense of things too vast for us to comprehend, but which apprehend, as Coleridge would say, our whole being; the impression of a height and depth of loveliness and perfect goodness that steals on the heart which has had these silent "communings with the glorious universe;" these are the influences which tend to elevate the man. One hour of mountain solitude—up on the utmost verge of earth, with nothing higher but the clouds and desolate air—far below "the wrinkled sea," and the great ships no larger than sea-birds floating on the blue—man and his works dwarfed into the scale of mites; or, the gorge of a highland burn, where, shrouded by birks, and hazels, and rowan trees, the water-music steals among the grey boulders—there, stretched on the green brackens, what lessons of unutterable beauty may not be absorbed into the being! Sit there alone, and drink it in! The darkest crags are lit with flashing lights that are mirrored from the stream, and chase each other in continual play. What tangled greenery and dappled shadows from the shaggy brows of heather, resting on a network of naked roots, to where the ferns stoop their queenly plumes, and the soft mosses are cushioned by the pool! Such scenes as these reserve their holiest teaching for those who woo their solitude and their calm. Were it possible to read the inner history of characters which have become heroic, how many motive elements might be traced back to what was felt long ago in lonely walks, or dreamt of in boyhood by a sister's piano! Imagination then, perhaps, first pictured the ideal of a noble life. In such influences as these might be found the fine threads which have gone to form that golden chord within, which has since so often trembled into feeling at the presence of aught supremely fair in nature or in art, or throbbed out in the lofty impulses of a generous manhood. It is, strange, too, how often, with those whose lives appear no more than prosaic drudgery you may find some link binding to an ideal not yet dead: as with the stream which looks muddy enough as it flows through the haunts of traffic, but can be followed up to bright spots among the lonely hills where all is pure.

Or if we ascend to a higher region we find a close connection between impressions that have been so received and religious convictions. Many of the most necessary religious sentiments are the result, not of authority nor logic, but come to us only as impressions. The sense of the Infinite cannot be produced by a demonstration. The understanding is only dazzled by an array of numbers. Mr. Tupper may ask us to sum up "the autumnal leaves of broad Australia," to count the stars, to number the Arabian sands grain by grain, and measuring the Atlantic drop by drop, to add the drops, and sands, and stars, and leaves, and when all is done inform us that, though each were an age, they would go but a short way to make up eternity. But what rubbish this is! What better notion have we of the Infinite? We see but a great milky-way of units, "confounding judgment and amazing to the intellect," as the old woman described the flights of her favorite minister. How different is the impression borne in upon the soul when the summit of a mighty Alp is reached, and the traveler finds himself in the silent wilderness of rock, and ice, and snow! Around are mountain masses, fold behind fold, lessening and paling into unutterable depths of glowing sky, while the giddy abyss below is measured to the eye by the eagle floating in mid-air above the gorge and hoary pine-woods. Tongue cannot utter it, but the heart there feels the power of the Infinite. The bare midnight heavens, or the roar of an Atlantic sea breaking in storm, impress it more than all the feeble heaping of the sands and leaves.

And thus is it that we find in the lives of those who have been the prophets of religion in the world, so much told us of their retirement with nature. Not only may we see in them that loneliness which must ever, in a measure, be the concomitant of mental greatness, but there is in them a wondrous background of contemplative solitude. We can to some extent trace this in Abraham. His wandering life as a stranger, the repeated mention of his going forth by himself to meditate, the eye so often directed to the numberless stars, with many other hints, make us conceive of him as one who dwelt apart, and to whose solitude were vouchsafed the holiest visitations. It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance which the forty years in the great wilderness of Horeb had in the fitting of Moses also for his work as the lawgiver of the Jewish church. For may we not trace the wise purpose of God in leading him, who had been first taught all the learning of Egypt, to that land of silence and of mountain glory, that amid the solitudes of Midian he might receive more awful thoughts, and a still profounder education? For such an end it was his lot to wander for forty years, as an Arab shepherd, in these retired valleys, where the naked Alps of Sinai tower into cloudless air, cutting the blue vault with their marble peaks, and where loneliness, the sublime spirit of the desert, reigns supreme. As for years he dwelt there, what thoughts must have visited him! As he beheld the unveiled majesty of nature, how must the sense of his own frailty, and the perishableness of all that glory he had left in Egypt, been borne in upon his soul, and, above all, how awful the sense of that living God who had piled those mountains, and who was caring for him—the mere speck on the bosom of that vast waste! And thus all the old pride of learning—the ambition and self-confidence which had once betrayed him into the deed of blood—were purged out of him. These years of still communion hushed for ever the strivings of his self-will. And so we find him no more the Moses ready to strike down the wrong-doer, but the meekest of men; the mild, patient, reverent Moses, willing to follow where God might lead. And that desert, with its awing impressions, has been a school for more than he. How constantly do we find in the prophets the influence of the wilderness, which in a measure surrounds that land which has been the cradle of religious thought for the world! The psalms of David are almost entirely the poetry of his lonely wanderings. Elijah's spirit and that of his prototype, John the Baptist, are charged, like thunder clouds, with the intensity of convictions received, not in the schools, but in the solitude of the Judean wastes. Nor can we forget how the Holiest of all cultivated retirement. Amid the quiet hills of Nazareth nearly his whole life was spent, and as He fulfilled his divine mission among the crowds of men, how constantly did He recognize the blessed influences of solitude for the true accomplishment of work! How suggestive are such sayings, "Let us go into the desert." "He went into the wilderness." "He went to a solitary place." "He was all night alone." Is it irreverent for us to believe that in his perfect humanity He felt the need of these still spots — not for physical rest—but for the repose of his being in contemplative communion? His refreshment was solitude. Let us be assured there is teaching in all this for us now. For as the tendency of our own age is to hurry, and to over-work, we ought the more carefully "study to be quiet," if we would not become shallow and worn out.

Even for the true enjoyment of nature it is necessary to remember this. How far more profitable would "vacation time" be to many who most need its refreshment, if instead of submitting themselves to the miserable toil of "commissionaires" and sight-seeing, or the prolonged worry of a fashionable "watering place," they would only take themselves off where they might hear for a while "the beating of their own hearts," and realize something of the universe and their own personality. But let them go without pre-occupation. For if we would feel the holy influence of the world around us, and have the spirit of beauty withdraw her mantel to our eye; if we would receive the gift of reverence instilled by wide calm, and the simple loveliness of common things, we must be willing to lay aside our cares and our ambitions—nay, our very science—and become for a time merely receptive, but passive listeners in this glorious temple. The heart stored with such impressions as are then experienced has rich food for refreshing afterthought. Like the glory of summer lingering far on into night, so these pure hours carry their light into future years, and we know their blessed power when all around is perhaps dark enough.

"Oft in lonely rooms and 'mid the din
Of town and cities, we owe to them,
In hours of weariness, sensations sweet,
Felt in the blood, and felt along the heart,
With tranquil restoration."

And the importance of solitude is still greater from a religious point of view. No dogmatic teaching, nor "religious reading," nor Christian work should be allowed to usurp the place which belongs to contemplation. The more our energies are taxed to keep up with the feverish demands of labor, the more should we guard against sacrificing the receptive to the active side of our nature. The Roman Catholic Church wisely recognizes this necessity, and provides "Retreats," to which the over-busy or the tempted may retire for a season for the purpose of religious seclusion and devotional meditation. Other churches too have followed her example in different ways. And, while we may find much to condemn in such institutions, besides the erroneous theology with which they may be more or less associated; while we may believe that they are worked on too mechanical a plan, making contemplation a thing of exceptional treatment rather than engrafting it as an abiding element on common life; yet they doubtless do supply a want which is widely felt. This devotional life has not been cultivated among us as it ought. Too little room is given for the purpose of being still and alone with God. The old saying, "Enter into thy closet and shut the door," and the old examples of the greatest and holiest were never in more need of practical remembrance than now. Even for the sake of making work truer, we must make it a business to reserve these open spaces in daily life for that influence of spiritual repose. We degenerate into fussy busy-bodies, formalists, or conceited dogmatists, except we sometimes "study to be quiet," and when "many are coming and going, go apart by ourselves, that we may rest awhile."—Donald Macleod.

BISHOP WIGHTMAN.—We are happy to announce that Bishop Wightman has decided to reside in Charleston, S. C. The Bishop arrived in Augusta, with his family, on Saturday week, and next day preached twice—in the morning at St. John's and at night in St. James' Church—besides addressing the children at St. John's Sunday school in the afternoon. The congregations at each service were very large; at night many failed to gain admittance into the crowded church. The powerful preaching of the Bishop, marked by his characteristic unction and earnestness, made a profound impression on his congregations. After spending a few days with his relatives and friends in Augusta, Bishop W. set out for Charleston, and arrived in that city on the Tuesday following. We cannot but regard this movement of the Bishop as one tending to promote in the highest degree the interests of Methodism in Charleston and throughout the State, and we tender to the Methodists of the Queen City our hearty congratulations on the return to his native home of their beloved Bishop.—So. Christian Advocate.

A NEW REFORMATION.—Six hundred gentlemen from various parts of Great Britain were assembled under the auspices of the Church Association in London on the 26th and 27th ult. Preservation of the Protestantism of the Church of England is the object of the Society. Resolutions in regard to Sacramental errors, Auricular Confession, Vestments, etc., were discussed at length, with great ability. One of the speakers, in answer to the query, "What does the Association mean?" answered that it intends to test the great fundamental question "Whether the doctrines of the Church of England express Romish or Protestant opinions?" A resolution was carried by acclamation, providing for a guarantee fund of not less than fifty thousand pounds, to enable the Council to assist parishioners who may apply to them for advice, and for expenses of appeals to the law courts, undertaken for the purpose of ascertaining the law on any point involving Romanizing doctrines or Ritualistic practices.

REV. JAMES HAMILTON, D. D.—This great preacher and author, whose name is a household word in the Christian world wherever the English language is read or spoken, died November 15th. He was a Scotchman by birth and education, but for twenty-six years had been pastor of the Regent Square Presbyterian Church, London. The works by which he is best known in America, are "Life in Earnest," "The Royal Preacher," "The Mount of Olives," "The Lamp and the Lantern," and "Lessons from the Great Biography." His last and perhaps most charming work is "The Prodigal Son," recently re-published in this country, in beautiful form, by the Carters.

THE Papist newspapers of Paris have been denouncing with great vehemence Garibaldi's red flannel shirts as "the hulks' color." The journals were completely silenced by the Journal des Debats, which reminded them that they should have remembered that Garibaldi and his followers were not the only people in Italy who wore "the hulks' color." Everybody knows that the Cardinals are habited from top to toe in red.

WALRUSSIAN WEALTH.—Reports of gold deposits in our new Russian possessions are still coming in. The latest is contained in a letter to Secretary Seward from Mr. Berry, of Oregon, who relates that a party of prospectors found, the Stickteen river, three hundred miles from its mouth, gold and silver deposits of great wealth, also rubies and agates, and on Bristo river copper and coal indications.

THE value of improvements in machinery may be estimated from the fact that in 1819 it required two furnaces, each with a high chimney shaft, to produce 1000 feet of glass per week, while now two furnaces, with but one shaft, produce 12,000 feet, with the same if not a smaller consumption of fuel.

THE Mount Cenis tunnel will be lined in its entire length with stone quarried in the immediate vicinity of the two entrances. At the present time the excavations, or headings, are about 1,500 metres in advance of the amount lined.

THE Strasbourg line of railway has introduced a three story passenger railroad car. The ground floor is the first class, the second class apartments above, while third class passengers must climb to the highest story.

To SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

THE CHURCH FAIR.

A fair for the benefit of the Gretna church will be held by the several Sabbath schools of the Southern Methodists in this city, at the Masonic Hall, corner of Perdido and St. Charles streets, beginning on Tuesday evening next, the 21st instant, and continuing four nights. Tickets of admission, 25 cents.

The Gretna church was built mainly by the liberality of the Methodists in the city. It was dedicated just before the war. A debt remained on it in the shape of a builder's note, amounting to some sixteen hundred dollars. At the close of the war, to save the church from passing out of our hands, the interest which had accrued on the note, some six hundred dollars, was paid by several friends—Messrs. Gay, Givens, and Oglesby. Now the holder of the note has closed the mortgage, and the property will be sold on the 30th instant, and be lost to us unless the money can be promptly raised to relieve it. The people of Gretna are willing enough, but actually unable to rescue the house. The church is a beautiful frame, with a basement room and a steeple. It is neatly fenced in, and eligibly located, and it is the only Protestant white church in Gretna. The ladies have resolved to sell articles at reasonable rates, and to give change.

Mr. P. P. Werlein has kindly undertaken to secure the services of gentlemen and ladies friendly to the cause for a CONCERT on some evening of the Fair.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Chairman and Treasurer of the Louisiana Conference Foreign Mission Committee presents the following report:

The above amount has been forwarded to W. T. Smithson, Treasurer, at Baltimore.

VOLUME ENDED.

This number ends volume XIII of the ADVOCATE. These weekly journeys have brought us through two long years. The editing of a paper had never occurred to us as even a possibility in our future, when, as a result of the peace, the revival of the ADVOCATE was determined on. We have often wondered at the docility with which an ox holds his neck for the yoke. It must be because he has no memory for the past, and no idea of the future. 'Tis a sublime and honest simplicity. If he has any sense at all it must consist of a general notion that he was made to work, and that if the worst comes to the worst he can but chew his cud.

In reflecting upon the memorable occasion of the battle of Cressy one knows not which to admire the more, the steady courage of the blind old duke, or the fine sense of the Black Prince in seizing upon the armorial motto of the noble Bohemian as a spoil of the victory, and in emblazoning it upon his own crest. Who is able to estimate the effect of that "Ich dien" upon English character? We think we see it in the faithful plodding of every honest Englishman. In the greater battle of life, no matter how desperate the fortunes of the day may appear, he can afford, if necessary, to go down in the fight if sustained by the consciousness that, whether in life or death, he has honestly "served."

This exalted conception of serving, the Saviour greatly enhanced, both by precept and example. "I am among you as one that serveth," are his own wonderful words. Accepting the condition of a fallen race, He, the unfallen Adam, does not lessen the toil of life; but how much does He mitigate and sweeten it! "Work while it is day," was his counsel to those who, thanks to his blessed light I have the "day" to work in. HE labored until the going down of the sun, and the greatest burden of his life was borne at its close.

Mr. Wesley has said many good things, but nothing more characteristic of himself or worthier of our imitation than his "Let me cease at once to work and live." He was a fine illustration of the good and faithful servant whom the Lord found ready at his coming. So whether at an ADVOCATE, or on a district, or on a circuit, or in the still harder post of a station, a Methodist preacher should be glad to realize that he is a servant of the church "for Jesus' sake."

With this number many subscriptions terminate. We hope that our friends will find it pleasant and profitable to enter with us upon the fortunes, the changes, and momentous events of another year, that both reader and editor may mutually encourage and strengthen each other.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

To the Secretaries and Treasurers of the Annual Conference Boards of Domestic Missions:

DEAR BRETHREN—You who have not already complied with our request, will please forward immediately to the undersigned your last annual reports. Do not fail to comply with this earnest call. The Annual Report of the Secretary cannot be made without the proper data, and that you have. Refer to the circular which was addressed to your late conference, and to your Discipline, and you will see what is needed. Brethren, do not delay.

Respectfully,

J. B. MCFERRIN,
Sec. B. D. M.

A PASTOR of East Baltimore Conference says his mode of raising missionary money has resulted in an "increase beyond all expectation." This is his mode: "For several years in my public collections I have imposed a card and printed circular in an envelope, addressing one to every member of my church, and any friend I may know favorable to the cause. On the evening of the missionary Sabbath I receive envelopes and money result."

THE FAIR.

The Agricultural Fair now being held in this city is thinly attended by contributors or visitors. We felt much interest in the agricultural department, as the one most accurately representing the possible future of this State. The passage from planting to farming must of necessity be attended with much experiment and trouble to the planter. But the sooner he avails himself of all the improvements and those aids to the muscle of the white laborer which are now in full use at the North, the sooner will this period of perplexity end. The first requisite among Southern farmers is to be independent of negro labor. When that is accomplished that labor can be controlled. A patent horse-rake, a cultivator, or a reaper and grass-cutter will go far toward securing this result. Machines were exhibited from the factories of Bickford & Huffman, 59½ South street, Baltimore; from Pearson, Aiken & Co., at Trenton, New Jersey; from Walter A. Wood, 40 Courtland street, New York; a gang plough from Barber & Hawley, Decatur, Illinois. Also a cotton chopper and cultivator from Talladega, Alabama—agent, E. C. Wharton & Co., No. 88 Common street, New Orleans. A cotton-seed planter by J. W. Mount, Medina, New York. These cultivators and the gang plow were arranged for two horses. The farmer, seated as in a buggy, drives his team afield, with protection from hot suns and rains if he chooses. A boy of fifteen can by these improvements make a full hand in the cultivation of corn or cotton. The South abounds in cleared fertile lands capable of immense food-production; fields without a stump, well set in grass, the very condition adapted to the profitable use of horse plows, rakes, and cutters.

The ramie fibre, the plant, the root, and the machine for breaking the stalk, attracted much attention. It flourishes wherever the fig grows; requires the same cultivation as the ochre; it is said to yield two or three cuttings in the year. The fibre is soft as cotton and very white. It has no advantage over cotton, we should suppose, excepting in the greater ease with which it can be gathered. The South will always raise cotton enough for its own clothing, and can afford to pick that much.

Washing machines were usually surrounded by interested gentlemen and ladies—the former more intently of the two, as if the thought crossed their minds, just the bare thought, of a not very distant possibility of having to do that, along with other "chores." We contemplated them, and always do with melancholy earnestness. How to get along without wetting one's fingers is the question; and between Mr. Edson's Louisiana machine and the attached India rubber wringer—for which the inventor should have a universal medal—we thought we could see that a week's wash might, if the worst came to worst, be gotten through very handy.

The soap business is quite an extensive one in this city. J. H. Keller exhibits some fine specimens of castile soap made at his factory, and a variety of most excellent brown and white soaps, for which he took several prizes.

The department of stoves was well filled and some very fine ones displayed. The "Good Samaritan" struck us as being on the whole the most convenient and economical one.

A large display of woods, seeds, fruits, and shells from British Honduras was on exhibition—more than we had supposed were grown there. We wished to ask a good many questions about rare looking products of that region, and regretted that some one had not been stationed by to give information. Mr. J. P. Harrison contributed this interesting table.

Some good specimens of stock were exhibited, but on the whole the display was meagre, when we consider the excellent climate and pasturage represented.

Works of fine art were few; scarcely any of native production were to be seen. So, too, we were greatly disappointed in the floral display. No place can surpass this for variety and richness of its horticulture. We therefore expected a good deal.

"The times" seems to have blighted the fair. People are not able to go to the extra expense of setting forth their wares. The prospect of a sale is not sufficient just now to warrant it.

We regret to notice the violence done to the sentiments of the community, certainly to the most enterprising part of it, by the Committee of Arrangements, in ordering special displays on the Sabbath. When will the people of New Orleans learn that a violation of the Sabbath carries with it evil, and only evil—a defiance of the public respect for the law of labor and rest, instituted and incorporated by the Father of mercies in his unalterable law of the Ten Commandments?

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE REPORT ON PERIODICALS.

St. James mentions chastisement as one evidence of an honest parentage. It moreover indicates a parental solicitude. The Montgomery Conference has therefore done a good part by us in its "Report on Church Publications." Ours is the only paper with which it finds fault; so tender is it of its own. It is quite refreshing to see any variation from the unmeaning stereotype common-places which usually make up conference documents upon church interests—that indiscriminate praise which is so cheerfully and liberally dispensed. The fear of giving offense usually takes out the life from these official criticisms; but we are glad to see in this instance that the conference fully appreciated the temper which we have—of deriving fresh excitement and a healthy stimulus from "complaints."

This "looking after" the paper indicates, we doubt not, upon the part of the Conference, a strengthened purpose to nourish it. It would be monstrous to apply the rod and then refuse to supply bread to one's offspring. As the report passed by a "handsome majority," we should like amazingly to know who voted for it, so that we might call upon them for help in time of our need. This majority must have mainly looked to the future, for in the past some of them have sent but few subscribers to the ADVOCATE. So that by what process a "majority" obtained its consent to "look in the month" of the ADVOCATE we cannot guess, unless it be in view of what they intend to do for it.

The resolution complains of "typographical" errors. True, alas too true! Fortunately the foreman and proof-reader we had—one of the best we know of—was called to preach, and now fills an important post in the Louisiana Conference. This left us to experiment about for a twelve-month. Three weeks ago, we believe, we found one who will give satisfaction.

The fear of being "mutilated" is a very natural and common uneasiness with contributors. We fully appreciate it. Articles are sent to us often which are not in a condition to be served up as they are. Genius despises the laborious and painstaking methods of preparation necessary to good writing. The direction to "serve it up whole" does not mend the matter. The most skillful cook in the world could not do so and make it palatable. The tail-feathers, head, neck, top-knot, insides, and other "superfluities" must be gotten rid of; sometimes its very gizzard has to be taken out—in fact an entire "reconstruction" has to be attempted. We do not wonder when it appears that the author barely recognizes his own—for the chief ornaments of the bird have been stripped off. It has been not only "mutilated," but fricasseed, and then flavored with French sage. He should reflect that a large company sits down to partake of the contribution who do not care where it came from, so that it be good, and who have no special interest in the ornamental appurtenances which at first accompanied it.

We are glad to see that the report winds up with a hearty resolution to stand by the ADVOCATE through evil report and good report. If that Conference will, in deed and truth, promptly and heartily stand by us, it may rate us every year to its heart's content.

THE POLITICAL NEWS.

The Constitution was never subjected to a greater strain that is now upon it. The policy of the Radical party has come to be a question in which not only the South is deeply interested, but the whole country, from Maine to California. The course of Congress is an attempt to deprive two of the departments of the government of their constitutional powers, and to possess itself of all executive and judicial authority. It creates an officer who shall have control of the War Department, and be alone subject to the will of Congress. By this action the President would no longer be commander-in-chief of the army.

Let us suppose that Congress should determine to do away with the executive department of the government—then what? But to strip the President of all constitutional power is tantamount to that. The Tribune opens an editorial on Congress as follows:

"The House and Senate are doing nobly. The restoration of Mr. Stanton was plucky, and, at the same time, prudent. The passage of the bill in reference to the Supreme Court was timely. Now let the reconstruction bill go through, and we shall have an end of this Hancock business, with Sheridan back in New Orleans and Sickles in Charleston." It adds: "This is no time to split hairs or chop logic, or dawdle over the mere technicalities of precedent. The work must be done. We must reconstruct the South in spite of the President. We must override him, and if he persists in this fatal and deplorable course he must be swept away as an impediment to reconstruction."

POLITICAL NEWS.

PLATFORM OF THE OHIO DEMOCRACY.

We copy the following resolutions adopted by the Democratic State Convention of Ohio at Columbus, on the 8th inst.:

Resolved, That we condemn the legislative usurpations of Congress, and particularly the several acts of reconstruction, so-called, as violative of the Constitution, a compact between States, and as utterly subversive of every principle of self-government that distinguishes a free people.

Resolved, That we are opposed to any measures which recognize that the integrity of the Union was ever broken; that any of its members were ever out, and that we determinedly insist that the Southern States being no longer in insurrection or at war with the Federal government, are entitled to the full State recognition and constitutional representation in Congress and electoral colleges given to all the States; and that the denial of it to them by Congress, and its efforts to dictate by military force a government for them, are undoubtedly revolutionary and despotic.

Resolved, That we are opposed both in principle and policy to negro suffrage; that the State of Ohio having, by the emphatic majority of 50,000, rejected it for herself, is sternly opposed to its being forced upon other States; and we stigmatize such an imposition by the Federal government as a most base usurpation.

Resolved, That the practical effect of the so-called reconstruction acts of Congress is to deliver over ten States to the political and social control of negroes, and to place the lives, liberties and fortunes of whites residing therein into the hands of a barbarous people; and it would inevitably lead to a war of races or the Africanization of the South.

Resolved, That notwithstanding enormous and conceded frauds in the creation of the public debt, the faith of the country is pledged to its payment, principal and interest, according to the terms of the several acts of Congress under which the bonds representing the debt were issued, but not otherwise; and we are opposed to any plan for extending the times of payment, thus increasing the amount of gold interest to more than the principal, or to any declaration by Congress that the principal is payable in gold, which would virtually add more than a hundred millions to the burden of the debt on the people; and opposed to the insane policy of which these measures are a part.

RECONSTRUCTION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The rules were suspended by 116 to 44 for the introduction of the additional reconstruction bill, which was telegraphed Saturday. The bill will be debated to-morrow and Wednesday, when a vote will be taken on it; the minority are pledged to make no dilatory motions.

The rules were suspended, and the bill introduced and passed, making five Judges of the Supreme Court a quorum, and requiring two-thirds of the full bench to make valid any action infringing directly on the laws of Congress; and should District Court decisions affect in any way the constitutionality or validity of such laws, said decision shall be certified to the Supreme Court, and unless two-thirds of the full bench concur, said decision shall stand reversed. Vote, 116 to 39.

The reconstruction bill referred to in the above telegram declares "that their are no civil governments in the lately rebellious States, and that the provisional governments shall not be recognized as valid or legal, either by the Executive or judicial authority of the United States. And in order to facilitate the speedy enforcement of the several reconstruction laws, the General of the army is authorized to remove all officers now employed, and appoint others for the performance of all acts required by those statutes, to the end that the people of the said several States may speedily organize civil governments, republican in form, and be restored to their political power in the Union. The General of the army is also empowered to remove all civil officers and appoint others in their place. So much of the reconstruction acts as authorizes the President to detail the military commanders or remove others is repealed.

"The bill declares it unlawful for the President to order any part of the army or navy to assist by force of arms the military of these provisional governments, to oppose or obstruct the authority of the United States.

"The bill further declares that the interference by any person with the intent to prevent by force the execution of the orders of the General of the army, shall be held to be a high misdemeanor, and that the party guilty therof, on conviction, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars and imprisoned not exceeding two years.

"The bill repeals all parts of the reconstruction acts inconsistent with the above provisions."

Stevens voted against the bill in Committee, asserting that it was intended to elect Grant.

THE OHINA MISSION.

To the ministers and lay members of the M. E. Church South, in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.

BRETHREN: We have a missionary in China who needs pecuniary help at this time. Bro. Lambuth has been supporting himself and family for two years or more, by his own labors. This keeps him from doing all the work a missionary should. He cannot do one-half the work he ought to do, as a missionary, under such circumstances.

During the war we could not communicate with China, nor send funds to the missionaries. Hence they created a debt, which is not all paid yet. Our last information is that they had received but one remittance from the Board since the war ended, and that they appropriated to paying their debts. Hence they are pressed to support themselves.

Now I propose that every preacher in charge of a work in the Mississippi Conference take up a collection for Bro. Lambuth, and send the money to me at Sharon, Miss., and I will buy a draft with the money you send me, and send it to Bro. Lambuth. Will you do it? Cannot every momber pay ten cents? Are there not hundreds and thousands who could send me one dollar each? Are there not many who could send me five dollars each? Will you do it now? It is needed now. Don't put it off till you raise another crop, for if it is to be invested in the cultivation of of another cotton crop I shall never see it. Save your dimes and dollars now by investing in the China Mission, for Bro. Lambuth's support. The liberal soul deviseth liberal things. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver. He that watereth shall be watered also himself. Who will respond first? Send your money, brothers and sisters!

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

CHINA MISSION.

MR. EDITOR: Brother Smithson, Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, makes an admirable and timely proposition to the members and friends of the M. E. Church South. His suggestion is simply this: Let every member and friend of the church send twenty-five cents as a new year's gift to the Missionary Treasury.

Now, beloved Christian friends and brethren, is there any love of Christ, any love of souls, in our hearts? If so, let us show it by a prompt and universal response to this proposition. Here is an opportunity for all. But few can say they are too poor to give twenty-five cents, and hundreds, I trust, will cheerfully give ten times as much, so that our now empty treasury may receive an average of twenty-five cents for every member in the church.

Brethren of the ministry! Read this proposition to your congregations! You can easily send to Brother Smithson the small sum of twenty-five cents for every member of your charge. Let superintendents of Sabbath schools bring it before the teachers and children everywhere. God help us to do our duty in this matter!

Our brethren in China are calling loudly for help. They are waiting and watching, toiling and praying; as faithful, earnest-minded men as ever enlisted in the service of the Saviour. They are without the means of support, and in debt. The church sent them there; will it suffer them to perish? They have labored with their own hands for bread. Can we not, will we not send them help? Only twenty-five cents! Can we, will we refuse this! If this appeal fails I shall despair, not only for our foreign missions, but for the church at home. If we heed not this call God may forsake us, and heed not our cry in the day of our distress.

"Shall we whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Shall we to men benighted
The lamp of life deny?"

Your brother in Christ,
W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM.

ABINGDON, Va., December 29, 1867.

[Why does not the Treasurer call for ONE DOLLAR EACH? We venture to make the call for him. No Methodists in Christendom are poorer than those of the M. E. Church, South, in Louisiana. But a man must be poor indeed who cannot, and cold indeed who will not give one dollar to sustain and stand by the missionaries we have sent out to China. We begin: let us hear the response. Send it by mail, with the initials only of your name, and we will acknowledge the receipt by publishing the initials. Let the children give the twenty five cents; but grown people more.—EDITOR.]

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The impression gains that the Senate will not sustain the House in its aggressive legislation regarding the Supreme Court.

Proceedings in the House to-day render the passage of the new reconstruction bill on Wednesday almost certain.

After the vote on the bill to reorganize the rules of the Supreme Court, in the House to-day, Garfield moved to suspend the rules that he might introduce a bill to reduce and improve the military establishment by the discharge of one major general—the one last commissioned in the grade before the first of January, 1868—Hancock. After decided intimations on the part of Brooks, Randall and others that they would resort to filibustering to prevent the passage of the bill, Garfield withdrew his motion, giving notice that he would renew it next Monday.

The Senate to-day, after an executive session of five hours, passed the resolution reported from the Committee on Military Affairs declaring the reasons of the President for removing Stanton from the War Department insufficient, and that they do not therefore concur in the act of suspension. The vote on the passage of the resolution was—yeas 35, nays 6. The Senate then ordered a certified copy of the resolution to be sent to the President, Grant and Stanton.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Senator Thayer will introduce a bill to-morrow to reduce the number of major generals to four and of brigadier generals to nine, the object of which is to legislate out of commission Major General Hancock and Brigadier General Rousseau.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The excitement regarding the additional reconstruction legislation is intense.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—The Tribune's Atlanta special says that General Meade has removed both the Governor and Treasurer of Georgia, and appointed Colonel Thomas H. Ruger, of 33d Infantry, Governor, and Capt. Rockwell, of the Ordnance Department, Treasurer.

The dispatch adds that it is reported that the President has directed Meade to suspend his order removing Jenkins.

Reported defalcation of $400,000 in a Wall street bank.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—At 12 o'clock M. to-day a certified copy of the Senate resolution, to the effect that the reasons for the suspension of Stanton were not sufficient, was served upon Grant and Stanton. A copy was also served on the President at 9 o'clock this morning. Grant and Stanton had a conference on the subject at 8 o'clock last night, and agreed that the former should this morning retire from the War Department, and the latter should take possession.

In pursuance of this understanding, Grant, at 10 o'clock this morning picked up his papers in the War Department, and with them withdrew to his headquarters.

Stanton, after a short interview with Grant, took possession of the War Department, and is now officially engaged therein.

At 11 o'clock one of Grant's staff presented a communication to the President from Grant, giving notice of what had transpired.

What will be the next step so far as the Executive is concerned, I am not authorized to say; but a few hours will decide his purpose, should Stanton persist in holding the office. Some of his friends say, however, he will at once resign; others that he will endeavor to hold on.

OBITUARIES.

Died, at Gainesville Junction, Miss., Sept. 6th, 1867, Mrs. CORNELIA HUBBARD, wife of Rev. Eli Hubbard, of Macon, Mississippi.

The deceased was born in Madison county, New York, in the year 1831; made profession of faith in the Saviour in 1857, at Potsdam, New York, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at that place, and was for eight years past a resident of the South.

Such is the brief record the hand of affectionate remembrance desires to make of one whose unexpected death has already thrown a deep, dark shadow of gloom upon the heart and home of friend and acquaintance. Though singularly quiet and unobtrusive, yet she but seldom, if ever, failed to impress all with whom she had intercourse that she possessed in an eminent degree those admirable principles which ever marked the true woman, and which enabled her to fill with peculiar fidelity the sacred duty of wife and mother. Her only surviving child was the subject of her most careful, constant, and affectionate training, while he by whose side she walked for a few brief years this life's winding way, felt indeed that the path formerly brightened by the mild yet beautiful radiance of her presence is now sadly and mysteriously darkened, and that the weight of an affliction inexpressible has fallen upon him. Let us cast our burthen upon Him "who careth for us." For

"Who could bear life's stormy doom
Did not Thy wing of love
Come gently waiting through the gloom,
Our peace branch from above."

May the great God, whose ways "are indeed past finding out," enable the stricken ones yet surviving to be cheered with the blissful experience that

"Sorrow touched by Thee grows bright
With more than rapture's ray,
As darkness shows us worlds of light
We never saw by day."

J. BANCROFT.

MACON, Miss., Jan. 9, 1868.

Departed this life on the 21st of October, 1867, in Tensas parish, Mrs. MARY E., consort of Mr. Matthew Bowman.

She was the daughter of a widowed mother, Mrs. E. M. Goldman; born April 3d, 1842; married in the winter of 1860; united herself with the church in 1861. She was an affectionate, obedient daughter, kind and strongly attached to her brothers and sisters; a lovely and devoted wife, a sincere and ardent friend, an excellent neighbor, and the centre of attraction among her acquaintances. She was a consistent Christian. Religion threw its charms over a naturally lovely character, more fully beautified and adorned her conduct, and more effectually qualified her for the varied relations in life. In her illness she was a patient sufferer; in her death she was resigned and hopeful. She has gone to join her cherub daughter, Lizzie, who was born Dec. 21st, 1863, and died Oct. 1st, 1867. Shall husband, father and relatives meet them in heaven, or be separated forever?

W. G. MCGAUGHEY.

Died, at Chrystal Springs, Miss., Dec. 27th, 1867, WILLIE LUTHER, son of Lucy B. and Rev. J. W. McNell, of the Mississippi Conference, aged 1 year and 4 months.

IN MEMORIAM.—The death of a good man is always a loss to the community in which he has lived. The death of men so eminent for their Christian virtues as our Fathers in Israel, who have been recently called away, is almost an irreparable calamity, and they deserve those marks of respect that finite beings can render them. Therefore:

Resolved, That in the demise of the Rev. John J. Robertson, and the Hon. John M. Whitney, the Methodist Episcopal Church at Fayette, and this Board of Trustees, has been deprived of the services of two of its very efficient members and officers, they having been from the organization of this Church, members, and for over thirty years its President and Secretary.

Resolved, That their devotion to the cause of Christ, and their zeal in church affairs, deserves our emulation.

Resolved, That we submit with Christian resignation to this dispensation of our Heavenly Father, and we earnestly pray that others may be raised up to take their places.

Resolved, That these resolutions be forwarded to the New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

THOS. REED, Sec'y.

GONE TO JESUS.—Our Sabbath school at Opelousas has lost another of the little lambs of the flock since I wrote to you last month—ALBERT, third son of Rev. Fisher T. Ranson. He was a dear chubby little fellow, about five years old, on whose fine expressive features the sunniest smiles were ever chasing each other. He was one of those engaging children who win hearts as easily as humming-birds extract nectar from the flowers! Precious little soul! How we shall miss him in the Sabbath school! All that doctors and anxious parents, and a most devoted grandmother could do was done to detain the child among us, but to no purpose. Quietly and sweetly the patient little sufferer passed away one bright morning last month. What a delightful consolation we have in the death of children—that in leaving us they but go to the bosom of Jesus. J. W.

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST IN GOLD COIN.

THE BEST INVESTMENT

FOR SURPLUS CAPITAL.

THE ATTENTION OF INVESTors, Trustees, Executors, and others desiring an unusually safe, reliable, and profitable form of permanent investment, is called to the advantages and assurances of the

Central Pacific Railroad

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company offer for sale their FIRST MORTGAGE THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT. GOLD BONDS, and submit to investors the following, among other obvious considerations, and invite a comparison with the merits and excellences of any class of corporate securities:

I. These bonds are based upon the most vital and valuable part of the grand National Pacific Railroad, soon to become the main channel of communication on the continent

II. The local settlement and the business therefrom is remarkably large and profitable, and must constantly increase

III. The hardest part of the road is now built, and the remainder will be rapidly carried forward over the Salt Lake plains

IV. The greater part of the means necessary to build the road is provided by the United States Government upon a subordinate lien

V. The State and chief cities of California have contributed upward of $3,000,000 to the enterprise, without lien

VI. The grant of land is destined at an early day to prove of far greater market value than the total of the first mortgage bonds loaned upon the road and equipments

VII. This road lies altogether among the gold and silver producing regions, and its revenues are received in coin

VIII. The management of this Company has been distinguished for prudence and economy, and the surplus earnings, after payment of expenses and interest, are devoted to construction purposes

IX. The interest liabilities of the Company upon the portion now in operation are less than a third the net earnings

X. Both principal and interest are payable IN GOLD, under special provisions of both National and State enactment

The bonds are in sums of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in January and July, and are offered for sale at 95 per cent of their par value and accrued interest from July 1 added, in currency

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

These bonds bid fair to attain the most prominent position among the non-speculative investments of the country, and will be actively dealt in at the money centers in Europe

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of ten to fifteen per cent in addition

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the

CHILD'S MORNING PRAYER.

The morning bright, with rosy light,
Has waked me from my sleep!
Father, I own, thy love alone
Thy little one doth keep.

All through the day, I humbly pray,
Be thou my guard and guide;
My sins forgive, and let me live,
Blest Jesus! near thy side.

O make my rest within thy breast,
Great Spirit of all grace;
Make me like thee, then shall I be Prepared to see thy face.

BLIND ROBERT.

One day I met a little boy in the street who was going along very slowly, feeling his way by the houses and the fences, and I knew that he was blind. If he had had eyes to see with he would have been running and jumping about, or driving a hoop, or tossing a ball, like the other boys in the street. I pitied him. It seemed so hard for the little fellow to go about in the dark all the time; never to see the sun or any of the pretty things in the world; never to see the faces of his parents, and his brothers and sisters. So I stopped to talk with him. He told me that his name was Robert, that his father was sick at home, and his mother had to take in washing, and work very hard to get a living. All the other children had some work to do, but as he could not see to work he went after clothes for his mother to wash. I asked him if he did not feel sorry because he was blind. He looked very thoughtful and solemn for a moment, and then he smiled—smiled just as an angel might smile in heaven—and said: "Sometimes I think it hard to creep about so.—Sometimes I want to look at the bright sun that warms me, and at the flowers that feel so soft when I touch them. But God made me blind, and I know that it is best for me, and I am so glad that He did not make me deaf and dumb too. I am so glad that he gave me a good mother, and a Sabbath school to go to, instead of making me one of the heathen children, that pray to snakes and idols."

"But, Robert, if you could see you could help your mother more." I said this without thinking, and was sorry as soon as I had said it, for the little boy's smile went right away, and big tears filled his blind eyes and ran down his pale cheeks.

"Yes," he said, "I have often told mother so; but she says that I help her a great deal now, and that she wouldn't spare me for the world; and father says I'm the best nurse he ever had, though I am blind."

"I am sure you are a good boy, Robert," I answered quickly.

"No, sir," he said, "I am not good, but have got a very wicked heart, and I think a great many wicked thoughts; and if it wasn't for the Saviour I don't know what I would do."

"And how does the Saviour help you?"

"O, sir, I pray to him, and then he comes into my heart and says: 'I forgive you, Robert: I love you, poor blind boy! I will take away your evil heart, and give you a new one,' and then I feel so happy, and it seems to me as if I could almost hear the angels singing up in heaven."

"Well, Robert, that is right; and do you ever expect to see the angels?"

"O, yes, sir! When I die my spirit will not be blind. It is only my clay house that has no windows. I can see with my mind now, and that, my mother tells me, is the way they see in heaven, and it is said there is 'no night there.' But here it is night to blind people all the time. O, sir, when I feel cross because I cannot see, I think about heaven, and it comforts me!"

I saw now that Robert began to be uneasy, and acted as if he wanted to go on. I said, "Don't you like to talk with me, Robert?"

"Yes, sir, I do; and it's very kind of you to speak so to a poor boy; but mother will be waiting for the clothes."

This evidence of the little fellow's frankness and fidelity pleased me. I had become much interested, and made up my mind to find out more about him. So I took some money from my pocket and gave it to him to buy something for his sick father. Again the tears filled his blind eyes.

"O, sir," he said, "you are too good! I was just wishing I could buy something for poor, sick papa; he has no appetite, and we have nothing in the house but potatoes. He tries to eat them, and never complains; but if I could get something good for him it would soon make him better, I know it would. But I don't want you to give me the money; can't I work for you, and earn it?"

I made him take the money, and then watched him to see what he would do. He went as fast as he could for the clothes, then bought a fowl to make soup of, then a loaf of bread for toast, and felt his way home, trembling all the way with delight. I followed him without his knowing it. He went to an old-looking house, that seemed to have but one room. I saw that he put the bread and fowl under the clothes, and went (as I thought by the sound) close to his father's bed before he showed them; then dropping the clothes, he held up the loaf in one hand and the fowl in the other, saying: "See, father! See what God has sent you!"

He then told about my meeting him, and, giving him the money, added: "I am sure, father, that God put it into the kind man's heart, for God sees how much you wanted something to nourish you."

I am afraid, children, that there were some tears in Uncle John's eyes as he turned away from the blind boy's home.

How beautiful to love God, and to trust in him, as poor Robert did! Could you be so contented and happy if you were as poor as he is, and blind too? Think about it, dear children, and perhaps I'll tell you more about blind Robert some other time.

SCIENTIFIC.

Effect of Lightning on Wires.—When the electric fluid is passed through a wire, undulations of the latter are produced, and the wire is momentarily shortened. This shortening was first observed by Nairne, but no satisfactory explanation of the phenomenon has ever been given. In a paper addressed to the Academy of Sciences by M. F. P. Leroux the subject is examined anew. Operating on wires left entirely free at their nether extremities, the undulations were quite apparent, but their order was so irregular, and they assumed such a variety of shapes that no rule could be laid down regarding them, but M. Leroux observed that the temperature caused by successive electrical discharges was not without influence upon them, and he concluded that the phenomenon alluded to involves in its explanation no new principle, and is simply a question of temperature. As the heat engendered by the discharges increases, the wire tends to expand in length by dilation, but simultaneously and from the same cause there is a tendency to increase in diameter, and it is to this double molecular action the undulations must be ascribed.

German Mourning Candles.—These are made by heating paraffine with the shells of the Anacardium nut, which contains a black resin soluble in paraffine. While the paraffine is liquid it is of a dark brown color, but on solidifying it becomes jet black. The candles have a very thick wick and burn without giving off any unpleasant odor or vapor. Who will invent some combination of chemical substances to incorporate into sterine or wax candles which will give a variety of colors when burning, say red, green, or yellow? The demand for such an article would be very great for illuminating purposes.

The female skull, according to Weckler, is smaller than that of man, both as regards horizontal circumference and internal capacity, and the weight of the brain is correspondingly less. It may be said that the type of the female skull approaches in many respects that of the infant, and in a still greater degree that of the lower races.—With this is connected the remarkable fact that the difference between the sexes as regards the cavity of the skull increases with the development of the race, so that the male European excels the female much more than the negro does the negress.

Encouraging, Very.—J. R. Glover writes to the New York Farmer's Club that he has been so engaged in his experiments in hatching eggs artificially that he has not had his clothes off more than two and a half hours in any of the twenty-four for the last three months. The results of his persevering labors he sums up as follows: "I have used about 1,600 eggs, and I have now on hand, in good condition, sixteen chickens—just one chicken to one hundred eggs." Still he believes the thing can be done, if we only knew how.

Sweden owns 500 iron mines, which yielded in 1864 half a million tuns of ore. All the smelting and refining processes are carried on with wood charcoal. Very little bar iron is manufactured, the annual product never exceeding 300,000 tuns of pig. By the Bessemer process some 3,200 tuns of steel were produced in 1864. The amount of cast steel in the same year was 4,500 tuns.

The total length of electric telegraphs in the world, not including the submarine, amounts to upward of 180,000 miles, which is more than enough to go round the earth half a dozen times.

FARM AND GARDEN.

From the American Agriculturist.

BRAIN FARMING.

It is to be lamented that so much of our farming is mainly a matter of muscle. The routine farmer uses about as little mind in the cultivation of his fields as the ox that he drives. His team always goes in the ruts made by his fathers. He has no well-devised system embracing many years of improvement for his farm. His object seems to be to get through the year as easily as possible, and get a subsistence from the soil. Now we want something better than this, and are beginning to have it. So much more productive is brain than muscle, in manipulating the soil, that we know of instances of first-rate farming by men who never put hand to the plow. It is undoubtedly more satisfactory to a man to give his whole attention to husbandry, and ordinarily this is the law of success. But so great is the need of more capital and more mind in this business, that we welcome from any quarter the men who can show us how to make farming profitable. The best cultivators that we have found in the country are men bred to other pursuits; professional men, mechanics, merchants, and bankers, diverted temporarily from their chosen pursuits to husbandry, or adding this to their other business. We have seen so many cases of eminent success in this kind of farming that we think favorably of it, and do not hesitate to recommend it to any man who has capital and a taste for husbandry.

Men of this class generally have abundant capital, and are not afraid to invest it in this business. They bring the mental discipline and tact of the town on to the farm, and work with as much faith in the field as they once did in the shop or the counting-room. Their skill, trained in other schools, tells in the field. The shoemaker turns his attention from taps to tap roots, and turns out such crops of beets, carrots, and turnips as are the envy of the neighborhood. The lawyer pleads his case with the soil, and wins such verdicts as he never obtained from juries. The physician medicates the barren fields, and infuses into it such health and productiveness that all the old fogies wonder what sort of manure the doctor uses. The minister tills his glebe with so much skill that he brings both the butcher and grocer in debt to him at the close of the year. The banker runs a farm as skillfully as a bank, and makes it pay surer dividends.

It is not necessary that a man should live upon his farm in order to make it pay. It is desirable that it should be near his residence, that he should see it every week, and lay out the work for the foreman. But very good farming is done even without this, if a man will give his attention to it.—Washington planned his farm crops and rotations with his campaigns in the fields of war, during the dark years of the Revolution.—Webster, at Washington, dictated the plan, and most of the details of his farming, at Marshfield, and that was certainly quite respectable. Professional men in villages and cities often have farms in the suburbs that they cultivate with great satisfaction and profit. Sometimes the foreman is a partner in the business, and takes the farm at halves, furnishing half the stock, tools, seed, etc., and taking half the crops. But this does not always work well. If the land-owner has liberal notions of improvement it works quite ill; for he looks to the permanent benefit of his place, while the foreman very naturally looks for large receipts at the close of the year. The best method is for the landholder to hire a competent foreman with a family, on a salary, and if he wishes still further to stimulate his endeavors, give him a small share in the profits of the business. It should be stipulated that he should board what laborers are needed, at a given price, so that the crops may not suffer for want of working at the critical time. This will save all disputes about the application of manures, rotation, sale of crops, and other details. With a good foreman, capable of directing labor, a man of capital in the village or city can carry on a farm, and make it pay. But he will not find it a sinecure. If his time is already fully occupied, or if he is averse to the business, he should not attempt it. But if he has a taste in that direction, and is willing to plan, and labor with his brain, he can find a great deal of pleasure and sure profits in cultivating the soil. The amount of the dividends will depend a good deal upon the skill of the operator, the seasons, the facilities for marketing, and the contingencies which affect all other industries. Farms located near cities and villages usually rise in value, and this consideration often determines capitalists to these enterprises.

Fire "Kindlings."—A good supply of these often gains half an hour's time in getting work started in the morning. Previous thorough drying is essential. A few fine shavings or slivers, and then larger well dried pieces to get up a strong heat at one point, are better than all fine stuff. In some European countries we found the common kindling material to be shavings dipped in melted resin or pitch, and then wound in balls two or three inches in diameter, like knitting yarn. They were very effective, seldom failing to ignite wood or coal, though where hard anthracite is used, a little charcoal is placed around the pitch ball. These balls are clean, easily handled and used, and are sold by the piece or by the measure, like potatoes here. In most of Europe potatoes and other roots, and all kinds of fruit, are sold by weight, as they should be always — eggs included. Another novel kindling material, in common use in several places, is pine cones. Those we saw at hotels were very effective in starting wood fires.—They contain resin enough to give a flame for several minutes, if there be a little draft.—American Agriculturist.

An Excellent Ointment for chapped lips and hands, for dry sores, for burns, for sore nose, for softening corns on the feet, for piles, in short for any diseased surface where a soft protecting coating is required, is what is called "Glycerine Ointment." This can be readily prepared by any druggist, by simply rubbing into what is termed "cold cream" a little glycerine—just enough to give it a soft, lard-like consistency. More glycerine can be added in winter than in summer. A drop or two of oil of roses stirred in gives it an agreeable perfume. It should be kept well corked, and be made fresh every month or two. When the hands become chapped or roughened by cold weather, smear them with a little of the glycerine ointment at night, rubbing it in, and then wipe off all that will soil the clothing, and the skin will usually be soft and pliable in the morning.—American Agriculturist.

Hog Cholera—Tar as a Cure.—Tar has frequently been recommended as a cure for hog cholera, which name is probably given to two or more distinct diseases. Our correspondent, F. L. Walker, of Caswell Co., N. C., has such success that we give his communication: "As soon as I find the hog is sick I have it caught and thrown upon its back; and take a ball of tar, a little larger than a hickory nut, on the end of a small stick, and put it down the hog's throat, and hold the hog until the tar is swallowed. I then cut off his tail or cut the oar, although I don't know that the bleeding is an advantage, but think the tar is what effects the cure. I cured a good many very bad cases in this manner. Tar has been given by rubbing it on the corn, but in that way I don't think the hogs swallow enough of it."—American Agriculturist.

Keeping Fish in Moss.—In December we gave an article on Peat Moss (Sphagnum) and its uses.—Mr. C. F. Austin, an enthusiastic student of mosses, writes us of another use for Sphagnum: "When I was down in the pines of New Jersey I was told that fresh fish could be kept better in warm weather if wrapt up in this moss than in ice, and I gave it a trial. I took from a can about a dozen pickerel, and a lot of catfish and eels, and put them up for a friend in New York—all alive—in a basket of sphagnum, at nine o'clock in the morning on a hot day in June, and I was told by a member of his family that the next morning when the basket was opened in New York every fish was alive."—American Agriculturist.

Grape Cuttings.—"Novice." If you have only 10 or 12 single eyes, and the kind is rare, you had better get some experienced propagator to start them for you. If as a "Novice" you wish to amuse yourself, you can try your eyes in a pot, in a hot-bed, the last of February or early in March. Propagators differ as to the amount of wood left on the cutting, and the form of it. We cannot give the space now to describe them. A half an inch of wood above and below the bud will probably answer your purpose as well as any.—American Agriculturist.

Clotted or Bloody Milk.—Chester Palmer, of Lake Co., reports his practice as follows: "Take a potato or two, and with a penknife bore out a hole in each, large enough to insert a piece of the root of blood root, which do, and feed to the cow. You will see a change for the better in 12 hours"—American Agriculturist.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.

TENTH SESSION.

The exercises of the school will be resumed on Wednesday, October, 2d, 1867.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education:

Particular care is bestowed on the moral and social culture of the pupils.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a satchel for dirty clothes.

It is urgently requested that Students be prompt in their attendance. A few days absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms: Board and Tuition per session, $360.

Payments.—$200 in advance—balance 1st March.

Tuition of Day Scholars, per session, $75 00 payable—one half in advance—balance 1st March.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the School demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as Teachers, gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

Is constantly in session under able Professors. It was founded in 1832, and is chartered by the State. Its former students may be found as Principals or Book-keepers in a large portion of the old houses of this city and over the Southern States. Ladies or gentlemen can attend the COMMERCIAL COURSE; or Book-keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, English, French or Spanish, separately. A business education, that enables one to earn $1000, $2000, or $3,000 annually, is the best fortune parents can give their sons. A DIPLOMA from this College is a passport in all Commercial communities. Ladies and Gentlemen are invited to call. We have ample arrangements for 1000 students the present year. Liberal arrangements made for Clergymen or their sons and crippled soldiers. Catalogues sent to all who desire them.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Dorenus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not, to strengthen the bands of the S. W. B. S.; by sounding for reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body, all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,

BROOKHAVEN, MISS

128 miles from New Orleans, on N. O. J & G. N. Rail Road.

The next session will open on Wednesday, the 11th of September, 1867.

There is a full corps of teachers; the instruction will be thorough; the discipline firm and strict.

The building is large and well arranged; the play ground ample; the location healthy.

The Institution is under control of the M. E. Church, South.

The entire expenses in the Collegiate Department for board, tuition, books and incidentals (not including music and the ornamental branches) need not exceed $125 00 for term of twenty weeks.

Each boarder must furnish her towels, one pair of blankets and sheets.

For further information, address

REV. H. F. JOHNSON,

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN, to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, we also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited but little animation since our last issue. Operations in sugar and molasses have been restricted by unfavorable weather, and the movement in tobacco and Western produce has been on a limited scale, without any material change in rates. The supplies of corn for shipment to New York and Liverpool have materially increased, but with the light amount of tonnage in port there is some difficulty in forwarding unless at rates of freight above the views of shippers. The only exception to the prevailing dullness is in our leading staple, which has continued in active demand, at rapidly advancing prices, the improvement realized since Friday amounting to fully 1c. per lb.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed on Friday evening at an improvement of ¼c., Ordinary being quoted at 12½ to 12¾c., Good Ordinary at 13¼ to 13¾, Low Middling at 14⅛ to 14¼, Middling at 15 to 15¼, Strict Middling at 15⅛ to 15¾, and Good Middling at 16, since which, under the combined influence of the favorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, noticed above, light receipts, scant supplies in proportion to the demand, increased competition among buyers, and a material rise in gold and foreign exchange, factors have been enabled to establish a further advance of 1c. per lb. On Saturday the previous movement was continued with unabated spirit, but operations being restricted by scant supplies, the sales were confined to 4,000 bales, while prices further improved fully ¼c., some authorities contending for a still greater advance. On Monday buyers again came forward with an evident willingness to go on at even stiffer rates, and the demand being subsequently stimulated by the decidedly favorable telegrams from Liverpool and New York, as well as by the rapid advance in foreign exchange, prices exhibited an uninterrupted upward tendency throughout the day, resulting in a further rise of fully ¾c. per lb., while the business was to a liberal extent, comprising 6,600 bales. Tuesday the market opened with a very good demand, and during the morning prices ruled, if any thing, still more in favor of factors, but owing to the failure of the usual telegrams from New York, and the consequent interruption to operations in foreign exchange, the movement subsequently showed much less spirit, and 4,400 bales changed hands at irregular rates, closing at about Monday's figures.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,000 bales, taken partly for the North, but mostly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 9,831 bales, against 11,722 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 1,891 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 282,801 bales, against 385,909 bales the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 130,839 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 60,790 bales to Great Britain, of 31,730 to France, and an increase of 80,349 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we modify our quotations as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	13¿ to 13¿
Good Ordinary	14¿ to 15
Low Middling	15¿ to 15¿
Middling	16 to 16¿
Strict Middling	17 to —

MOLASSES.—The demand has been active, at full prices, especially for the better descriptions, and the sales, since our last review, embrace 800 barrels at 60 to 75c. for Fermenting, 65 to 66c. for Fair, not fermenting, 68 to 72c. for Prime, and 75 to 77½c. per gallon for Choice.

FLOUR.—The market has been dull at previous prices, with only a limited and local demand.

CORN.—The market has continued steady and firm since our last review, with an active demand for the trade and for export. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 20,000 sacks at 90c. per bushel for Inferior, and 93 to 95c. for Prime White and Yellow.

BISHOP SIMPSON says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the best Magazines published for children."

BISHOP STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"I believe that its introduction into every household would prove a blessing to young and old.

REV. GEO. D. BOARDMAN says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"I am delighted with 'The Children's Hour.' I do not see how a more entertaining, instructive or profitable Magazine could be put in the hands of our children."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"This dear little monthly visitant we believe to be by far the purest, safest, and most attractive magazine for the little one's at home, published in this country."

MR. JOHN B. GOUGH says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"I can endorse it thoroughly. It is a most welcome visitor to the family of children at my own home."

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

Trinitarian, an Arian,
Semiarian, and Trinitarian again.
When was he infallible? Pope
Zozimus first declared the Pelagian heresy innocent, and afterward wickedly impious. Vigilius, on the question of the Three Chapters, changed side four times. Athanasius left the creed of his church and embraced the Monothelite heresy, etc.

(2.) Two, and even three, popes have been found existing at the same time, condemning, excommunicating, and anathematizing each other. Who of the rival coexisting popes was infallible? All were condemned.

(3.) Successive popes differed widely from each other in opinion. Here we have pope against pope. Pope Gelasius pronounced formally and officially against the doctrine of transubstantiation, but was subsequently opposed by a host of other popes. Athanasius, after his death, was condemned as a heretic and organ of the devil by Popes Leo II. and Agatho. Benedict XII. condemned the doctrine of his predecessor, John XXII. Sixtus V. declared ex cathedra the Sixtine edition of the Vulgate authentic and true, but Clement VIII. opposed this, and authorized an edition with quite a material alteration from the former.

(4.) Popes cannot perform miracles to prove their infallibility. This the prophets and apostles did. Is it unreasonable to require of any mortal to prove his pretended fallibility by a miracle?

(5.) Popes have given decisions in philosophy contradicting reason; e. g., several popes affirmed officially that the Copernican system of astronomy was wrong, and luckless Galilio had to weep his eyes away in a dark prison for promulgating a contrary opinion.

(6.) Popes have often contradicted the manifest teachings of the Bible; but "all Scripture is given by inspiration," (2 Tim., 3: 16.) Pope Liberius gave his sanction to the Arian heresy. Honasius was a Monothelite, and Paul V. endorsed the doctrine of Suarez, the Jesuit, in defense of the murder of kings.

II. Does infallibility dwell with a general council, the council viewed collectively, the members individually being fallible? No. What constitutes a general council? How many persons does it require to form one? What clerical rank must they severally have? By what authority must they meet? Must they determine by unanimity or by majority? Who can answer? More: Rome distinguishes between general and special councils. What constitutes this generality or specialty? Who shall determine? Yet, according to Rome, only the general council can claim infallibility.

(1.) Let us assume that a general council must have 300 members. But 299 are about as good as 300, the difference being trivial. Yet 299 are fallible. 300 are very little above 299, while infallibility is a long, very long way from fallibility. Again: assume that a general council must be exclusively composed of bishops. But 299 bishops and a dean are about as good as 300 bishops. Still with the dean the council is not infallible. Imagine a council of 299 bishops earnestly seeking the blessing of infallibility. But, alas! they find it not. We throw in a dean; but of no avail. Though the dean's belly be round, large, and duly catholic in regard to the variety of solids and liquids wherewith it is lined, it is still not sufficiently weighty. Now a bishop is added to the 299, and at once infallibility is found—comes suddenly—comes like Minerva from the head of Jove, as sin from that of satan! (Par. Last, B. II.)

(2.) How can any number of fallible singles be infallible? Constitutes a collection of fools a wise man? Will 500 goats collected together become a herd of sheep? Whatever is in the genus must also be in the species; and infallibility being not in the species, not in the several members, cannot be in the genus, the general council.

(3.) Councils, as general as you please, have in succession contradicted each other, unsaying what had previously been affirmed.

(4.) Councils, as general as any, have contradicted the word of God. The second Nicine council sanctioned the worship of images, and the council of Constance called the laical use of the cup in the eucharistal communion an error, etc.

It is perhaps, in conclusion, stated that infallibility resides with the pope and general council taken together. But if it is not in either separately, how can it be with them when combined? Can two ciphers make an integer? Can two curved lines make a straight one? Can two fallibles make an infallible? By no rule of logic. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one."—(Job 14: 4.)

ORGANIZATION.—A place for every member, and every member in his place. Work for every one to do, and a right method of doing it. A time for everything, and everything done at the proper time. This is organization. And this organization is what we sadly need in many places. The lack of it has caused the church to limp and fall behind continually. Without it there may be spasmodic motion, confused and aimless energy now and then, but no real, substantial progress. It is not always the minister who does most work in person who does most good, but rather the one who most thoroughly rouses and organizes his membership for work. Thus the church will be edified—"the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love." The first concern of the pastor should be to organize his flock to work, each in his place, and all in harmony. Like a skillful general, let him move forward his forces in compact lines upon the foe, and the victory will be sure.—San Francisco Spectator.

During September the heading at the east end of Hoosac tunnel was carried forward one hundred and eleven feet, and sixteen hundred and nine cubic yards of rock were excavated from the enlargement at the east end.

From the Leisure Hour.

WIDOW No. 1.

'Very sad, very sad, indeed!' said Mr. Emanuel Dovedale; 'why was I not applied to sooner?' and giving orders for his long gaiters and water-proof coat, he told his housekeeper that he must have an early dinner, for he had a very long walk before him that afternoon.

'Will you not have a conveyance of some kind, sir? It never suited you to walk directly after eating.'

'No, thank you, Sarah; I cannot very well drive to-day. It won't hurt me for once,' he said, looking away from her, for he hoped she would take the hint and go, as he did not wish to pursue the subject any further.

Sarah understood, and went, but came back again, saying, 'I was going to bake the pigeon-pie to-day.'

'Yes, very good; it will do nicely,' said Mr. Dovedale; with indiscreet briskness adding, 'it will be just the kind of dinner to fortify me for my walk.'

'But the oven,' said Sarah, seizing the cue thus imprudently given; 'I can't get that oven hot enough to bake that pie by half-past two; it's impossible.'

Mr. Dovedale glanced at the time and gave a shrewd guess at what made it impossible, but only replied:

'Well, what you can get ready do, for I must not wait beyond half-past two, even for a pigeon-pie.'

Sarah slowly, reluctantly retreated. Her master did not consider himself quite safe till a minute or two had elapsed, and then he unfolded his newspaper and said, with a smile, 'I shall have the pigeon-pie.'

And so he had; for, having punished him for changing the hour, and exposing himself to the danger of indigestion by the threat, the housekeeper took the oven in hand, and soon convinced it that the pie must be baked.

An hour after it had been served up Mr. Dovedale was walking with a firm quick step, stick in hand, gaitered and water-proofed, along the streets of London. As his errand was a charitable one, and his own means were appropriated almost to the extent of his power before the year began, (that is he planned out all he could spare for the year in January into certain channels, leaving little for chance charities), he determined, for the purpose of increasing his funds, to call on a few friends on his way to the house of sorrow whither he had been invited.

'Thirty-two! yes, thirty-two,' he said, knocking at the door of a handsome house. 'Is Mrs. Wickwork at home?'

'Yes, sir,' said the footman, and led the way to the receiving-room. By the side of a brilliant fire, surrounded by bright steel in every direction, on the surface of which its reflections danced, sat a lady past the middle age, but not much. She wore a widow's dress. She was pale and serious-looking. She had a book in her hand. Her chair was softly cushioned, and on the rich rug an embroidered stool supported her feet.

'Ah! Mr. Dovedale! this is indeed kind. It is a treat. I didn't expect,' she exclaimed, half rising as her visitor entered the room.

'I am afraid it is a long time since I was here,' he said; 'but you are rather out of my beat. I'm glad to see you looking pretty well. Your room is a vast improvement on out-of-doors; such a fog—you can cut it, my housekeeper says; it is a real wet blanket in your face—chills you, chokes you, and smothers you all at the same time.'

Mrs. Wickwork languidly smiled, and shook her head, and sighed. 'I'm sure I don't know what should make me look well,' she said; 'I have suffered much since I saw you.'

'Indeed! Anything—?' fresh, Mr. Dovedale would have said, but he didn't like to do it except by shooting up his eyebrows in an inquiring manner.

'What new sorrow do I want?' asked the lady, the tears slowly filling her eyes; 'it is just six months to-day since—'

Mr. Dovedale saw the white handkerchief on its way to her face. He heartily wished he had known the day of Mr. Wickwork's demise, and had called the next day, or day after; however, he kept silent until he thought she was calm, and then said gently: 'There are privileges attached to sorrow, and when the severity of the blow is past we are able to consider them, to—enjoy them he would have said, but the word sounded harsh in the presence of a widow's tears, and as he couldn't think of a better, he subsided into a close.

'The severity of an affliction like mine cannot pass. I can never suffer loss,' said Mrs. Wickwork.

Mr. Dovedale was very sorry, and he said so. He said more; he added that if the suffering did not grow less the consolation might increase, which would, of course, effectually diminish its amount.

'What consolation!' asked the lady; 'here I am alone, without an object in life I had almost said—no heart to repose on, no hand to lean on!'

Mr. Dovedale almost fancied that she must have found so poetical a description of her woe in the book she had been reading. His heart grew colder toward her. He said, in a tone getting quite out of the minor key in which sympathy is usually expressed, 'I am surprised, my good friend, to hear you ask such a question. There are certain and great consolations in Christianity, and I always considered you as a professor of it?'

'O, if it were not for that I could not bear up as I do,' said the lady.

'But, having that, you will surely learn to bear up better. Remember, my friend, how many are suffering under a similar bereavement, with the additional distress of poverty to embitter it. Now here are you surrounded with ease, and comfort, and even luxury; yes, luxury,' he added, as he glanced round the room. 'You are without a single care beyond that of your own personal health and enjoyment.'

'Ah! there it is! You have touched the secret spring of my deepest grief,' exclaimed Mrs. Wickwork; and to her companion's dismay up went the pocket-handkerchief again. If he had but known where that spring had lain he would never have touched it.

'You may suppose what a treasure my Lavinia would have been if she had remained to cheer me.'

'Ah, well, you know her marriage was considered a happy one, and her going to India with her husband was to be expected. Have you heard lately?' said Mr. Dovedale, hoping to turn the conversation into a more cheerful channel.

'No; and what has detained the mails so long I cannot think—some accident, perhaps; once, you know, all the letters were lost; and really to be kept in the agonies of suspense continually is very trying.'

'Very; but Colonel Wood will have his furlough soon, won't he? and then you will have them home that will be very cheering.'

'Very, when they come on account of his health; it is most precarious; perhaps he will have to throw up his appointment; I shouldn't wonder.'

It was like walking blindfold over red-hot plough-shares; Mr. Dovedale didn't know where to set his foot; he determined to 'touch no more springs;' so suddenly looking down on the rug, he declared it was the softest, richest, warmest looking thing of the kind he had ever seen.

Mrs. Wickwork replied that she had been disappointed in the wearing of it; it easily soiled, and the pile was not sufficiently elastic.

'How well it matches the carpet!' said Mr. Dovedale.

'You surprise me,' said the lady; 'there is no orange in the carpet, and it is the prevailing color in the rug. I did not choose it—I trusted to others.'

'Well, you've got contrast at least,' said Mr. Dovedale, rising. 'I must go. I am going to see a poor lady who is in very straitened circumstances, and very delicate health—a widow with a large family to provide for.'

'Poor thing!' said Mrs. Wickwork, shaking her head.

'I am not able to do much for her myself,' he continued.

'I am sure you will do all you can; but one cannot really help everybody as one would wish to do,' said the lady, her voice growing stronger, and her looks more alive.

'No, one cannot; but a poor sickly widow, with six orphans to maintain,' said Mr. Dovedale.

'Shocking, indeed; but there are so many public charities. I subscribe to one or two.'

Mr. Dovedale felt sure it was to one.

'I shall see about them,' he replied; 'but in the mean time she wants immediate personal help. I want to collect a little for her'—he opened the last words with some hesitation.

Mrs. Wickwork's face fell back in its usual hard lines, out of which sorrow had drawn it, she took out her purse, and produced half-a-crown. 'I don't generally give to chance applications,' she said; 'one gets so imposed upon; and really there is a tax of some kind forever coming. But I know I can depend on you.'

Mr. Dovedale had a great mind to push the half-crown back; she looked so cross and unfeignedly grieved to part with it. But he thought better of it.

'This is sweet, surely,' he said, taking it up, 'to be able to visit or help the fatherless and widow in their affliction; to hold the purse of God's providence, and be the happy hand to dispense his bounty.'

'Yes, indeed,' said Mrs. Wickwork, screwing up her mouth and putting her purse back into her pocket.

'What a miserable woman she is!' he exclaimed, as he paced on briskly through the fog; 'how shall I find poor Mrs. Mayblossom?' and his kind heart was pained as he contemplated his visit to the house of mourning, which was to be the end of his labors.

'Well, well; it's of no use to be sentimental about it,' he said; 'genuine feeling makes us forget ourselves, and weep with those who weep; and, after all, I may find it less trying to see her real sorrow, to which I may administer consolation, than the selfish whining of that—dear, dear; what an uncharitable spirit I am getting into!'

From the Southern Christian Advocate.

A New Religious Sect in Georgia.

I am not right sure that I have placed at the head of this article the proper caption, yet I can think of no one more appropriate. The reader, however, can better judge of this when he gets the facts in the case, according to the most reliable information which I have been able to get.

In the southeast part of Newton county, Georgia, as well as elsewhere, we had quite a number of colored members of the M. E. Church South. Some time last year the Rev. Mr. Yarbrough, formerly a minister among us, but who had recently identified himself with the radical church, established a preaching place at the "Cross Roads," about six miles below Covington. At this place this white man opened the door of said church and received into its pales the larger portion of his "colored brethren," who had been members of our church at places contiguous to the "Cross Roads." Among these was a black brother, who had license from us to "exercise his gifts" among the "colored people." Soon after the organization of the church at "Cross Roads" this said Rev. George—now it seems an "ordained deacon"—began under Rev. Mr. Y's eye, and doubtless by his direction, or at least with his approbation, to BAPTIZE by immersion sundry persons who had been before baptized by us, some of whom had been received into our church and baptized many years ago. When members of his fold were inquired of if these had not long ago been baptized, they reply promptly, "No, they were only sprinkled." So George has the creek dammed up near the place and, week after week, goes on with the good (?) work of BAPTIZING those who heretofore were "only sprinkled."

A young lady, (?) colored, of his congregation, when inquired of, gave this reason as what she supposed to be the cause of this procedure, that they have received baptism before by white folks. These people are not generally, as is well known, much versed in ecclesiastical matters, and if I were allowed to say a word to the Rev. George, I would tell him that if any of these rebaptized persons should ever wish to join our Baptist brethren they will have to repeat this process. By preaching, (?) lectures, and a supply of political pamphlets, all these "Cross Roads" people were so posted before our election for delegates to the State Convention came off, that I am of opinion not one of them whose legal right (?) it was to vote, failed to attend and to "vote right." Now, if this be a "new religious sect," what shall we call them? Baptists? That will not do, unless we prefix "radical" to it.

The question naturally arises, how are we to construe this new order of things? Do our radical brethren intend to ignore the ordinances administered by us, because we—the Church South—are "rebels." If even that be true, many of these people were baptized before the "rebellion"—aye prior to 1844. W. J. P.

At the plumbago mines near Sonora, Cal., from twenty to twenty-five tons are daily prepared ready for market. The remarkable purity of the products commands for it a very high price.

THE MINISTRY UNDERESTIMATED.—Young men selecting a profession are very apt to undervalue the ministry. We once heard one college student say to another: "What a foolish person you are to throw yourself away by becoming a preacher!" He himself chose the law, and is now a moderately successful attorney in a New York village. The fellow student, whose choice he thus criticised, in the ministry to which he gave himself, is a power acknowledged over a great part of this entire country, and every Sabbath is felt, as an intelligent man, more than his lawyer friend is in a whole year. When young men hesitate to enter the ministry upon the ground that other positions offer more desirable opportunities for a man to make himself felt, and as if it were a sort of self-sacrifice, they do injustice to Him who has appointed the Christian ministry, as well as to that high calling itself. Christ, our Master, has not so arranged things as that in becoming his servant a man must throw himself away. The noblest sphere of human endeavor, in every point of view, is the evangelical pulpit; and every young man properly endowed and duly called should feel that it is a high honor paid him when the voice of God and the suffrages of his brethren call him to such a post.—Christian Times and Witness.

AT a recent meeting in Providence, Rhode Island, Rev. Dr. Huntington thus spoke of church fairs: "Once let the people get poisoned with the wretched falsehood that in order to carry on the work of the church and meet its costs they must contrive some round about way of sale, or fair, or picnic; a mixture of merchandise, cajolery, and merry-making, by which the few shall be deluded into parting with more than they want to give, and the many shall be educated into the worse delusion of supposing that they are not to surrender anything to Christ, who died for them, without an equivalent taken back, and you strike at the root of all Christian charity, while the name is on your lips. You cast up a treacherous highway at the Lord's feet. You hide out of sight the central reality of sacrifice, which is the giving up to God of that which cost the selfish heart something. You cast out the heart of the church to extend its outward prosperity.

SPLANCHNOSCOPY.—If one holds an egg before a bright light, it is seen to be translucent. If a bright light were introduced into the stomach we could obtain a tolerably fair view of its anterior and lateral parieties by a similar property of translucency. Impossible as this demonstration would seem to be, it has been successfully performed by M. Milliot, of Paris. He introduces into the stomach glass tubes of small calibre, containing two platinum wires, connected with the electrodes of a powerful battery—the apparatus of Middedorpf he prefers—and thus kindles an intense light in the cavity. Tumors in the abdominal walls can thus be demonstrated, indurations and ulcerations detected, and indeed to what extent diagnosis may not be facilitated it were premature to say. Certainly the idea is novel, and worth considering.—Medical and Surgical Reporter.

A REMARKABLE CHOIR.—A correspondent gives the following description of the musical part of the service in a church near Carlisle, England:

When the psalm is given out the clergyman tunes a small violin, and having afterward touched a bass fiddle, hands the larger instrument over to one of the parishioners. Each then draws his bow across the strings, and, all being in order, the player of the bass gives out the verses to be sung, the two musicians are joined by a few parishioners, and the small party go through the psalm. The clergyman then abandons the violin, returns to the reading-desk until another psalm requires him to resume his instrument, and again goes through the tuning process, preparatory to the psalm-singing.

A NEW LUBRICANT.—From specimens of the Chinese tallow tree transplanted into Northern India, Dr. Jameson has made several hundred weight of grease, and has forwarded on trial a portion of it to the Punjaub railway to have its qualities tested as a lubricant. The grease thus obtained forms a excellent tallow, and burns with a clear brilliant, and white light, emitting no unpleasant smoke.

THE CHARGES OF THE CLERGY.

BY THE REV. GEORGE T. DOLE.

[Dedicated to those ecclesiastical societies which pay salaries of about six hundred dollars, more or less.]

Ho! ye good clergymen!
Come, lead us onward!
We for your livelihood
Promise six hundred.
Well your light service paid,
Let no demand be made;
Apostles, sirs, never had Greenbacks six hundred.

On march the minister:
Set on a remonstrance ethic,
Although full well they know
The people blundered.
"Theirs not to make reply;"
Though seeing no reason why
That scripture does not apply:
"Preachers should live," not die.
"Of the Gospel;" but how
To live on six hundred?

Charges to the right of them,
Charges to the left of them,
Charges confronting them:
Become outnumbered.
Flanked by bold butchers' carts,
Led by sharp traders' arts,
All bound to have their parts
Of the six hundred.

Millers and market-men,
Peddlers who call a; alo;
Agents and beggars then;
O! how poor ministers'
Pockets are plundered!
Still up the prices go;
All things for use or show—
Labor with a saw or hoe—
Nothing but preaching's low—
Low as six hundred.

Black coat—its threads are bare;
Daughters cry "Naught to wear,"
And the boys do almost swear
About their old garments,
So easily sundered.
But the minister's family
Should soar, like a camel high,
Stick fast in the "needle's eye," Puffed up with vain riches—
Give but six hundred!

Half a year, possibly,
Half a year onward,
They might get with weight of debt
Not hopelessly cumbered.
Six months, perhaps, they may Keep hunger's wolf at bay—
Live, narrowly, scantily,
If promptly they get their pay;
Get—the six hundred.

But rent bills to right of them,
Store bills to left of them,
Charged upon all sides;
How fight the year through?
Oft they have wondered.
Still they go struggling on,
No funds to fall back upon;
Cash received, fled and gone—
Little left of them—

Well earned the laurels
Sought by Jee, Tennyson,
On Balaclava's heroes,
Who faltered not, nay son,
Though thousand guns thundered.
But so! here a "Light Brigade"
Sustains a whole year's raid
On their small stipends made,
Till lives not even a shade
Of their six hundred.

WHAT ABOUT CONFERENCE.

SITTING NO. I.

Mr. Editor: It does a preacher much good to go to conference. When I was a boy I was appointed assistant in the experiments with the apparatus, and was sent into the laboratory weekly to make preparation. I soon found out how to magnetize my knife-blade, so that it would sustain needles, filings, etc., and was a hero among the children, with a wonder [illegible] all the time, for I would repeat the application ever and anon. Just so the soul of a preacher is charged with a new inspiration from the contact of a conference, and its recurring sessions keep up the influence. A preacher that don't go to conference is in danger of backsliding, and locating and contracting "circumstances."

In the first place he misses his fine suit of clothes, and by this loss he not only forfeits much comfort, but absolute qualification as a preacher. Any man can preach better in fine, new clothes. Lawrence Stearne said that his shortest chapters often cost him two clean shirts. The man that is "seedy" on Sunday is at a moral discount.

Then he loses the good feeding that distinguishes these annual trystings. The preacher "est homo et humani nihil a se alrinum," as Dr. Bond has it. My humorous host at Opelika assured me that he was more than glad to see me, upon the ground simply of personal comfort. "I declare, sir," said he, "that I haven't had a chicken pie or pudding for several weeks." "Well, Colonel," said I, "we'll have them now." And we had them.

Then he fails to get the benefit of the esprit de corps that rules more strongly in a conference, perhaps, than in any similar body; and he fails of the illumination that proceeds from a variety of minds, lit up with a diversity of ideas, and, above all, he fails of the spirituality that comes from the unrestrained communings of ministerial fellowship, from the penetrating leaven of pulpit teaching, and from the aggregated piety of old prophets and young prophets, in kindly and harmonious association. In a word, a Methodist preacher ought to go to conference at almost any sacrifice. But, you ask, how can the "new suit" and the "traveling expenses" be compassed? "Thereby hangs a tale." I, your deponent, in all good will toward unmarried men, do hereby affirm, declare, and testify that for and in consideration of official service, duly rendered on five or six several occasions during the year of grace 1867, by the celebration of the rites of matrimony between consenting parties, did receive, rejoice over, and safely convoy home fees amounting to eighty or one hundred dollars, more or less, and that by reason of this good luck I did furnish, equip, invest, and adorn my outer man in the most becoming and approved style, and that, like Oliver Twist, I am now ready and stand waiting for "more." How does your experience quadrate with this deposition, eh! Doctor? But "honor to whom honor is due." It may be that the seed which produced my fruit was sown years before the acorn that produced "Post Oak" had sprouted. So far so good. What about "traveling expenses?" Why, my dear sir, do preachers have any traveling expenses? Don't you know "Masonry" better than that? You are not bright, and I must lecture a little. Be it known that in every city and in every town, "where men most do congregate," there is a modest, convenient, cozy little house, hard by a steepled roof of "dim religious light." The man and woman in that house are there "not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Therefore you need not doubt a pleasant reception. Come on, ye brethren, agents, editors, teachers, preachers! Here is the place. Hospitality is never exhausted here. It is abounding. It is the bounden duty of bishop, elder, and deacon to be given to it. Therefore come, with business or without business. If you have business, you will save a hotel bill to that business. If you have no business, of course you cannot afford to expend your substance for nothing. Better stay at home in that case. Don't be uneasy. Mine host is used to deal with self-invited guests. He takes it quietly, like "a sheep before her shearers." May be he is fully persuaded that it is all right, and relies on the promise, "any grace is sufficient for thee." Come on, brethren! it is our duty to build each other up in the faith. Besides, you know that if we were to go to hotels and play the gentleman we might cherish a spirit of independence inconsistent with the humility of servants, and if we are too lavish of our compliments toward cabmen, porters, bootblacks, etc., it might be decided against us that we preach for money. By all means let us save our credit, and our money too. It may cost the parsonage mun something; but he is truly hospitable. There are two sides to hospitality, to be sure, and possibly it is more difficult worthily to receive it than gracefully to bestow it. Doubtless the first devolves a greater strain on one's manhood. We must, pot mind, however, the reproach of being poor, and therefore, in addition to extorting proper entertainment from our brother, we must feel no delicacy in sending him for the hundredth time to confer with railroad authorities about a free ticket. We must ignore the blustering rudeness of the punchy agent as he refers us to headquarters. We must bow low and smile blandly upon the pursy official who signs himself as president. We must crouch down and be silent before the ill-concealed impatience of the conductor, and then we must join with gusto in a vote of thanks for these gracious favors. "Angels and ministers of grace, defend us!" In very truth, Doctor, I liked the spirit of the "proud Hidalgo." May not a preacher, a poor itinerant, maintain, consistently with all his obligations, the bearing of a gentleman? Yes, sir; preachers do have to incur expenses in traveling. They are men, and have to eat and sleep and buy tickets, etc., and they ought to do it. And then the people whom they serve ought to pay them accordingly. Anyhow, a great many—the majority—of our preachers got to conference, and I am persuaded that not a man of them begged his way or played sneak on the route. I know some of them borrowed money, and may not be able to pay it back until they earn it by ditching, if necessary. But then they had abundant compensation, and enjoyed the "glorious privilege of being independent."

LETTER FROM BRITISH HONDURAS.

Southern Side Creek,
British Honduras, Nov. 25, 1867.

Mr. Editor: Flattering myself that you and many of your readers, whom I count my friends, would be pleased to hear from me since my arrival in British Honduras, I will pen a few lines to that end. We had a most unpleasant voyage. One hundred passengers, with berths for only fifty-six, made our accommodations exceedingly limited as to space and with reference to our eating arrangements. We arrived, however, safely at Belize on the seventh day after our departure from New Orleans, which was an unusually long voyage. On Tuesday, December 3d, we left Belize for our new home, which we reached in about seven hours' sail, on a small schooner. We were accompanied by Brother Thomas Garnett, of Bayou Sara, who had concluded to go with us from reading my letters, published in your paper in September last. He is much pleased, and has taken up his abode here. We procured at once three very comfortable houses, the Carib occupants moving into their kitchens to accommodate us until we can build.

The houses are built on sills placed on the ground — posts and studs about eight feet high—weatherboarded with the cabbage tree boards, (or Royal Palm,) batten doors and window shutters, hard, pounded dirt floors, and thatched roofs; one main room about eighteen feet square, and a bed room twelve by eighteen. We are now preparing to build, and shall somewhat improve on their mode, though the house we shall build will not cost more than one hundred and fifty dollars, and will have four bed rooms and large hall, and plank floors. We are now cleaning off our site for our houses just below the creek, and fronting on the sea. The creek affords the finest water, fresh from the mountains, only eleven miles distant. It is full of the finest kinds of fish. We have had almost daily good fish on our table. For twelve cents we got eight or ten red snappers, ten inches long, fresh from the sea. We get three plantains or bananas for a cent; yams, two cents a pound; pine apples, six cents. Our living will not cost us more than half as much as in the States. Last Tuesday we took a good look at our lands, and all—eight in number—who went along pronounced it equal to any land they ever saw. The banks of the creek, two miles above the sea, are fully six feet high, and as you go up they increase in height.

As you approach the hills and mountains they grow bigger and higher, and spread out—just about rolling enough to drain well. The soil is a deep rich mulatto, loose and easily cultivated.

We find the Caribs all that they have been represented. They are honest, cleanly, and industrious, and are very willing to work for us at $9 per month and rations of 16 pounds of pork and 28 pounds of flour per month. They are very polite, kind, and humble, and generally say "Master" and always make a bow or courtesy, and salute you with "Morning" when they meet you. One thing we notice as singular: they have no musical instruments, and seem to care little for music. Most of them here are Catholics, though some of them are Methodists and Baptists. They are decidedly religious. We hope to have our houses built by the first of February, and have a little town, which we shall name "Victoria." At present there are but three families, viz: my own, Thomas Garnett's, and James H. Walker's—in all fourteen whites, with some one hundred and fifty Caribs near by us. We shall keep them, as they are now, about half a mile distant from our town.

We expect, by the next arrival of the steamer, Rev. Wm. Linfield, Col. Isaac Harrison, Mr. Renner, and Mr. Daigle, and hope by the first of February to have a community of at least ten families. As soon as we get our houses built we shall clear lands for crops of rice, corn, cane, yams, and set out plantain and banana slips, and plant and sow garden vegetables. We have no fear that we shall starve or want. Our hardships will not last long. We shall soon feel an independence and a freedom from restraint that the people of the States for some time past have not enjoyed.

Brother Garnett and myself have had a prayer meeting for the last three Sabbaths, and shall keep them up until Brother Linfield and others get here, when we will have preaching on the Sabbath, and also prayer meetings. Thank God! it is not here like it is in the neighboring republics of Guatemala and Spanish Honduras. Here we observe any form of worship in public, as well as private, that we please. We hope, before the year 1868 closes, to have not only a church, but a school house. Honduras must soon become an agricultural country, and its resources as such are immense. There is no doubt that the mountains near by are rich in minerals of all kinds, and the sands of the mountain streams indicate gold and silver. The Providence of God is about developing the hidden riches of a country that have heretofore been to mankind of but little use, compared with what it must be found to possess. I have as yet no cause of regret that I came here, and think we shall have none in the future.

The report that the British government is opposed to emigration from the Southern States is false. On the contrary, they are promoting it, and the grants will all be confirmed.

Adieu for this time,

W. C. Chamberlin.

P. S.—I have just heard it stated that Mr. De Bramm took off three-fourths of an acre of sugar cane, (from measurement,) and it yielded six thousand pounds of sugar. The canes were from 18 to 24 feet long, and in blossom when cut.

Working Cheap.—"What does Satan pay you for swearing?" asked one gentleman of another.

"He don't pay me anything," was the reply.

"Well, you work cheap, to lay aside the character of a gentleman, to inflict so much on your friends and civil people; to suffer; and lastly to risk losing your own precious soul, and all for nothing. You certainly do work cheap — very cheap indeed."

People think it a weakness to forgive an insult. Then God would be the weakest in heaven and on earth, for no one in heaven or on earth forgives so much as he.

Important Discoveries in Jerusalem.

J. L. Porter, of Assembly's College, Belfast, writes thus to the London Times, November 19, 1867:

I have read with the deepest interest, and at the same time with very great pain, the letter of Mr. Grove and the accompanying documents, which appeared in the Times of the 14th inst.

The Palestine Exploration Fund is unquestionably the most important agency ever employed for the investigation of the Holy Land. Its object is the accurate and systematic examination of the archæology, topography, geology, physical geography, and natural history of the country, with a special view to Biblical illustration. It commends itself, therefore, to scientific men, to students of God's Word, and to the whole Christian public. Her Majesty's government, recognizing the great importance of the undertaking, placed at the disposal of the society a competent staff of the Royal Engineers. The names of Captain Wilson, and Lieutenants Anderson and Warren, the leaders of the expeditions, are a sufficient guarantee for the accuracy and thoroughness of the surveys and explorations.

The two expeditions have been eminently successful. Indeed, the results have been far greater than could have been anticipated, considering the limited resources, and they furnished just such information as was most needed. During the first expedition no fewer than forty-nine places were fixed astronomically, including the leading cities and sites from Baalbek on the north to Hebron on the south. An accurate basis was thus laid down for the construction of a map of the Holy Land. In addition, many important points of topography were cleared up, and a large number of the sites of old Bible cities explored.

The labors of the second expedition have been even more important. Mr. Warren has surveyed the whole plain of Philistia, the mountain region and valley of the Jordan from Jebe Usdum to Jezreel, and a section of Moab and Gilead, extending from Heshbon to Jerash. These facts demonstrate the paramount importance of a fully equipped scientific expedition; and I venture to hope that their announcement here will give a new impetus at the present moment to the Palestine Exploration Fund.

But, perhaps, the wonderful discoveries of Mr. Farren in and around Jerusalem will create even a deeper feeling of interest in the minds of the general public. These have already been sketched in the reports published from time to time in your columns. Their importance to the Biblical archæologist can scarcely be over-estimated. He cannot but feel that the great vexed questions of the topography of the Holy City and its sacred monuments are on the eve of solution. In common with many others I have been watching with the most intense eagerness every fresh stage in the excavations, as it corroborated some fact in history or illustrated some statement in the Bible. The course of the three ancient city walls, so minutely described by Josephus, are now being gradually traced. The exact sites of the most hallowed spots on earth—the Holy Sepulchre and the Jewish Temple—are in a fair way of being determined.

The colossal foundation of the Temple wall, in which are "stones of ten cubits and stones of eight cubits," laid by Solomon, or his successors on the throne, are now being laid bare at the enormous depth of 90 feet and more beneath the present surface. The bridge that once spanned the ravine between the Palace on Zion and the Temple on Moriah is now proved to have been upward of 150 feet high. If this be, as it seems, the "ascent" to the house of the Lord which Solomon showed to the Queen of Sheba, we cannot wonder that on seeing it "there was no more spirit in her." The "pinnacle of the Temple," on which the tempter placed the Saviour, has just been uncovered to its base, and is found to have an elevation of 136 feet. The statement of Josephus is therefore no exaggeration: "If any one looked from the battlements into the valley he would be giddy, while his sight could not reach to such an immense depth." Sections of the ancient wall of Ophel have been exhumed, showing that, as Josephus says, it was joined to the southeast angle of the Temple. Aqueducts, cisterns, and rock-hewn channels and passages have also been discovered within and around the Haram, throwing new light on the buildings, the arrangements, and the services on the Temple.

The great work of a complete exploration of ancient Jerusalem is thus fairly and auspiciously commenced. The opportune visit of the Sultan and Grand Vizier to this country, and the representations made the latter by the Archbishop of York, followed up, as they have been, by the energy, the wisdom, and the tact of Lieut. Warren and his admirable staff, have smoothed down Moslem prejudice, removed local opposition, and has brought about [illegible] for excavation and ex[illegible] as never occurred befor[illegible] sides, large numbers of [illegible] ers have been trained to [illegible] and are eager to be employed; and the exact points for successful explo[illegible]ation are now well known).

Biblical scholars are anticipating with deepest interest further discoveries. The attention of the whole Christian world is awakened; and just at this most exciting stage Mr. Groves makes the sad, the humiliating announcement, "The funds of the Society are almost exhausted."

I cannot believe that [illegible]ian public will permit a [illegible] undertaking to be abandoned [illegible] is wealth enough and [illegible]enough in England to ensure a successful issue. The Vulgarity of Loud Laughing.

I see in your excellent paper a little paragraph on good manners, in which spitting and lounging are described as proofs of a semi-barbarous state of society, and I must beg leave to police another peculiarity of our social manners, equally indicative of a low state of civilization: I allude to the loud talking and screeching laughter. This is so peculiar to Americans that they are known by it in Europe, and, as well-bred people, they never tolerate it. Even in the most social circles it is considered a mark of ill-breeding belonging only to the lowest class.

Aside from the conventional protest against it there is a regular objection to it, in the injury it does to the vocal organs. Talking through [illegible] at the top of the voice is very painful and fatiguing, and yet the noise made by the whole company is so great that no one can be heard who speaks low or in a natural tone. Many throats are made sore and many heads are made to ache by this unnecessary noise, and persons subject to bronchitis are obliged to avoid it entirely.

In all European societies the voices are kept lower than usual in large parties, and a general hum prevails, in which every person is easily heard by those he addresses. The loudness of Americans is very marked, and produces disgust and indignation when it breaks the stillness of picture galleries and other public places where nothing but whispering is allowed. When a loud voice is heard from an American traveler every one is startled and looks round to see whence it comes, and the comments on this breach of good manners are very severe.

I once introduced some very fine and cultivated Americans to a gentleman in London, who could have done much for their amusement, and procured their admission to many private galleries of paintings and sculpture; but after one experience of their vociferating, in a public exhibition, he would not again expose himself to the pain and the shame they then caused him. He wrote to me to excuse himself for not having done more for my friends, by saying that their loud talking made them not presentable in refined society, and not bearable in public places. He added that he had made a dinner party for them of Americans only, and they laughed and talked so loud that he was afraid the police would come in and see what the row was. — Correspondence of the Liberal Christian.

Popular as the late Mr. Hawthorne's works are in this country, they are, perhaps, still more popular in France. Besides appearing in the Moniteur, Le Siecle, and one, if not more, magazines, there are no less than three different translations of some of them.

Luther, in his busiest seasons, felt that praying-time was never lost. When remarkably pressed with labors he would say, "I have so much to do that I cannot get on without three hours a day praying."

"Awake the King!" the watch said,
"The night is past, the lamps fled!"
"Awake the King; the world would see Once more beneath his eyes unite."

"The storm that rocked our castle's base
Brought heavy slumber to his race,
And light and peace and happy days
Shall re-illume"—when the foe arise.

All, all dead! than the tempest's wail,
In coward hands the traitor steel!
The Lord's anointed! they that feed
"All hail!" have smitten—they have died.

They drank his cup, they broke his bread,
And, in his slumber, smote him dead!
His loyal Lords! to bear him to
The crimson of that murderous deed—

On Him all sacred seals were set!
To Him all power and honor due!
Dead! and what kings shall rise and reign
Ere we behold his like again!

Evidences of Christianity.—No. 2.

MOSES AND CHRIST.

We might continue and considerably expand the argument for revelation, deduced from its necessity. But as no one complains of there being too much light, we shall proceed at once to adduce arguments to prove that a revelation has been given, and that the Bible contains this revelation.

The first step in this discussion is to ascertain the existence, age, and actions of the leading persons mentioned in the Scriptures as the instruments by whom it is professed, the revelations they contain were made known.

With respect to these persons it is not necessary that our attention should be directed to more than two, Moses and Christ—one the reputed agent of the Mosaic, the other the author of the Christian revelation—because the evidence which establishes their existence and actions, and the period of both, will also establish all that is stated in the same records as to the subordinate and succeeding agents.

The biblical record states that Moses was the leader and legislator of the nation of the Jews nearly sixteen hundred years before the Christian era, according to the common chronology. This is grounded upon the traditional and national history of the Jews and it is certain that, so far from there being any reason to doubt the fact, much less to suppose, with an extravagant fancy of some modern infidels, that Moses was a mythological personage, the same principles of historical evidence that assure us of the truth of any unquestioned fact of profane history assure us of the truth of this. It cannot be doubted that the Jews are a nation of the highest historical antiquity. Neither can it be doubted that there has been a tradition coming down from the age of Moses—that he was their leader out of Egypt, and their lawgiver. There is no history and no fact to contradict this ancient and clearly expressed narrative. The historical authorities to which we may refer are but too numerous for our space. We shall quote a few in proof of the historical existence of Moses, and then take the same course in regard to Christ.

Those writers whose testimony we shall now adduce were neither Jews nor Christians, and cannot be accused of a design to furnish evidence to establish the claims of either Moses or Christ. Manethos, Cheremon, Apollonius, and Lysimachus, besides some other ancient Egyptians whose histories are now lost, are quoted by Josephus as extant in his days, and passages are selected from them in which they agree that Moses was the leader of the Jews when they departed from Egypt, and the founder of their laws. Strabo, who flourished before Christ, gives an account of Moses—his prohibition of image worship, and enjoining the worship of one invisible and universal Being. Justin, a Roman historian, devotes a chapter to the Jews, and gives substantially the Bible account of them. Pliny speaks of Moses. Tacitus says Moses gave a new form of worship to the Jews, and a system of religious ceremonies the reverse of everything known to any other age or country. Juvenal, in his fourteenth Satire, mentions Moses as the author of a book forbidding image worship and eating swine's flesh, and commanding circumcision and the religious observance of the Sabbath. Longinus mentions Moses as the law-giver of the Jews, and praises the sublime description of the creation. Diodorus Siculus speaks of Moses, and of his calling God Jehovah. Justin Martyr expressly says that most of the historians, poets, lawgivers, and philosophers speak of Moses as the law-giver and leader of the Jews. These authorities are enough to establish the existence and position of Moses.

The same observations may be made in regard to the existence of Christ and his position as founder of the Christian system. In the New Testament writings he is called Jesus Christ, because he professed to be the Messias predicted in the Jewish scriptures. He was acknowledged as such by his followers, and the date of his birth fixed some eighteen centuries and more ago. This is also uncontradicted testimony. The Christian religion, as a great historical and institutional fact, exists, and must have had an author. Its unity and its oneness of purpose show it the offspring of one mind. No other than Christ can be pointed out or claimed as the author of Christianity. The historical existence of Christ is so well established that we shall quote but two historians of acknowledged veracity and authority. Suetonius mentions Christ by name, and says that the Emperor Claudius expelled from Rome those who adhered to his cause. Tacitus records the progress which the Christian religion had made, the violent death its founder had suffered, that he flourished under the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, that Pilate was then Procurator of Judea, and that the original author of this profession was Christ. BE POLITE.

An anecdote is related of the late Gov. George McDuffie, of South Carolina, which we take pleasure in reprinting and commending to our little readers. When a very little boy he was one evening holding a calf by the ears while his mother milked the cow. A gentleman passing by, said:

"Good evening, my little son."

George returned "Good evening, sir," with so polite a bow as to attract the gentleman's attention, who said:

"Why did you not pull off your hat, my little friend?"

"So I will, sir," said George, "if you will get down and hold the calf for me."

His politeness and his shrewd remark were the making of him, for the gentleman, who was rich, said to his mother:

"Your son is a smart boy, and will, one day, if he is properly trained, make a great man. If you allow me, I will educate him and give him a start in the world."

His mother was only too glad to thank the gentleman for his kind offer, and to let him take charge of her son, who became one of the greatest men this country has produced, having been, at different times, a member of the Legislature, a Senator in Congress, and Governor of his native State.

No boy or girl ever loses anything by being polite and civil. Polite children are always beloved and respected. Be polite to all with whom you come in contact, the rich, as well as the poor, and never, under any circumstances, fail to be polite and respectful to the old. Be polite at home—to your parents and sisters—for politeness must begin at home. The boy or girl who is habitually impolite at home, is apt to be coarse and rude to strangers. It has been truly remarked that "nothing makes them so lovely as an habitual respect and dutiful deportment toward their friends and superiors. It makes the plainest face beautiful, and gives to every common action a nameless but peculiar charm."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

PREACHERS AND "ADVOCATES."

Mr. Editor: I do not think our preachers, in general, have a just conception of the importance of getting our religious periodicals into circulation. They do not realize how much their own personal interests and success are involved. I therefore presume to call their attention to this subject through your medium. It should be the object of every pastor to get a copy of the Advocate into every family of his charge, if possible, for the following reasons: our papers are devoted to the same great cause in which we labor, and powerfully co-operate with us in promoting religious light and knowledge among the people. They come weekly freighted with news from the churches, and keep our people posted as to what is being done for the cause of Christ. They give information from our mission fields in all parts of the world. Their contributors are numerous and able, and almost every point of Christian theology and practice is discussed in them. They enforce the teaching of the pulpit, and their various departments are adapted to all the members of the household. Family religion is encouraged, the children are instructed, and in various ways and from different points of light the importance and excellency of religion is set forth. Those families and individuals who patronize the papers are always found most forward in co-operating with the preacher in the various benevolent interests of the church. The Advocate is one of the most efficient colleagues the preacher can have. It brings the church in sympathy with the preachers; they read the accounts of their trials and hardships, the sacrifices they make in propagating the gospel, the lean support which many of them receive while bringing the Word of life and salvation to themselves and families, and they are aroused to a sense of their duty and the propriety of making some sacrifices themselves in order to sustain their ministers.

Many members of the church are entirely ignorant of the amount of toil and sacrifice their faithful ministers are called to make in the itinerancy, because they never read our papers, and thus are not in sympathy with the preachers and their families. If every member of our church was a regular reador of one of our Advocates there would be no difficulty in raising the amount necessary for the support of the preachers.

Reading the accounts of revivals of religion would stimulate our members to labor, and pray for like visitations in their own churches and communities. It would stimulate their zeal, and cause them to feel an interest in the success of the gospel among themselves. We see what political zeal is produced by reading party newspapers; and how much more interest is felt and manifested by those who read them than by those who never read a paper? The same will be the case in reference to religious newspapers. Those who read them are enlightened and stirred up to zeal for the salvation of sinners, and for the prosperity of religion, while those who read them not are indifferent, and feel comparatively little interest in the church.

The preacher should not wait for the members to call on him to order the paper, but make it an important part of his work to use all the influence he can to get the people to take the church papers. Address them from the pulpit; urge it upon them in your pastoral visits. Do not suffer trivial excuses to satisfy him. No money is better invested in a family than the annual subscription price of a good religious family newspaper. Convince them that they are interested both pecuniarily and spiritually in taking it. The children are instructed and family government is sustained. The hints in regard to domestic economy often save twice the price of the paper. Let every preacher go to work now, in the beginning of the year, and feel that in circulating the Advocate he is serving the Lord, benefiting his people, and promoting his own success. He will be amply rewarded in the results which will follow.

A PLUCKY MOUSE.

About eighteen months ago a drug clerk in Nashville captured a burly rattlesnake, about four feet long, and sporting eight rattles "and a button." He brought it home a prisoner, prepared a handsome glass case for its reception, and has since devoted his leisure to the study and care of the reptile, and three other varieties of snakes which he from time to time secured, and placed in the same case.

These snakes lived in perfect harmony. The one with the rattles, being quite the largest, paid no attention to his companions, and they, to reciprocate, paid no attention to him. In relation to the former the gentleman gives the following interesting particulars:

About two months after his capture, his snakeship changed his coat by shedding his skin. This he accomplished in short order. Being prepared, he commenced by striking his head against the side of the case until the skin was disengaged, and then, by a skillful series of convulsions he came out with a new suit, glistening bright—the whole process occupying twenty to thirty minutes. During the present year he has "shed" three times—in May, July, and a few weeks ago—and it is presumed this is his regular habit.

His diet is light. For two months after capture he could be induced to take nothing on his stomach. For some months he only ate one mouse, and nothing else, and was, for about that length of time, without eating anything at all. Within the last two months he has had a better appetite, and swallowed thirty-six of these dainty little creatures. His method is to "strike" the mouse with his fangs, and after he is dead he takes it in his mouth and then "down" it goes in a very few moments. He drinks nothing stronger than water, and only takes this "thin beverage" about three times a year. Most of the time he is perfectly quiescent; sleeps a great deal; when restless glides within the case as if seeking to make his escape, but makes no violent demonstrations.

Latterly he has had three companions—a chicken snake, a black, and a spotted bush snake. The first of these took a mouse three weeks ago; the others nothing. Some six or eight mice have been kept constantly in the case, but for some weeks have been unmolested.

A few days ago a fresh mouse was put in. He took a view of the situation and resolved upon fight. He first "went for" the least of the surrounding "evils." Grasping the least serpent he severed his head from his body in a few minutes, without injury to himself. He then, after a brief pause, attacked the next larger, cutting off the extremity of his tail. In this case he met with resistance, and was several times bitten, but persisted until he had killed his enemy.

Going for the "chicken snake," he moved upon its center—was several times stricken, but continued the contest with remarkable coolness and perseverance. When in very close quarters he would retreat and take breath.

In the midst of this fight the rattlesnake became aroused and moved excitedly about within the case. The mouse, esteeming this an act of hostility, pounced upon his new foe with desperate courage, hitting him about the head, along the sides, and upon the back.

He received fearful warning in the "rattling" of his snakeship, but received no wound from him. Quitting this one he would return to the other and renew his persistent assault, and for twenty-four hours he thus continued the struggle.

The poison he had received then began to work; he sickened, retired to a corner of the case, and expired.

Through to the Summit.—The track on the line of the Central Pacific Railroad was finished through the tunnel to the Summit on Friday evening, and on Saturday morning a special train of one car and one locomotive, with officers of the road and representatives of the press, passed over the line and through the great tunnel, arriving at the Summit in safety. The most difficult portion of the company's labors has been overcome—the rest of the route to Salt Lake is comparatively easy. The new portion of the road is in splendid condition. The summits of the mountains are covered with four to six inches of snow. A fortnight of open weather will complete the gap of six miles, when connection will be made to the lower Truckee, 138 miles east of Sacramento. By June next about 180 miles of road will be done.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY.

But if, at an infinite and humble distance, we should be intelligent co-workers with the divine Restorer of the world, the first condition of success is a knowledge of his plan—of his design and the means employed for its accomplishment. If we were so unfortunate as to believe, with M. Guizot, that his scheme, his system, is on the side of despotism, then we should either take leave of Him, or else, in the name of religion, become the advocates of despotism and the enemies of liberty. But He himself assures us that it is his design to emancipate the human family, and restore them to "the glorious liberty of the sons of God." By what means, then, does He seek to accomplish this object? By what truths, by what influences, by what institutions does He regenerate the world, and put a new face on the universe? Are these influences, these means, real? Are they facts in the history of the world; or are they merely fancies and fictions in the imagination of man? If, indeed, we should judge from most works on the philosophy of history, or the education of mankind, we should be constrained to believe that their authors placed a very low estimate, if any at all, on the sublime system of means and causes which God himself has ordained and established for the renovation of the human race. There is among them, it is true, a great difference in degree; yet all, more or less, either depart from "The Light of the World," or else ignore its existence. Their sins of omission are even greater than their sins of commission. All the tapers invented by the wit of man, all the lights kindled by human ingenuity, are industriously paraded and held up by them for the illumination of the world; but, if we may judge from their writings, they have but little faith in the real power of "The Sun of Righteousness." So meagre and imperfect, indeed, if viewed from the Christian standpoint, are most of these philosophies of history, as they are called, or schemes for the education of mankind, that a solar system without a sun, obscured by clouds and darkness, would scarcely be more dreary and desolate.

Now why is this? Are there any good reasons, any philosophic grounds for such omissions? If a philosopher professes to exhibit the causes of human progress, and to show them in correlation with their effects, why should he slight or neglect those which God himself has set in motion? Are not these the very heart and life-giving energy of the world? Is there any better reason, then, for excluding these great divine agencies from a system of the world than there would be for omitting the heart or the lungs in a system of anatomy or physiology?

The Christian scheme, it may be said, is the light of the world, and will operate as such, whether we understand its laws and operations or not. That is, it is a great practical system, which does not require the analysis, or scientific comprehension, of man to give success to its manifold and mighty influences. This is, in one sense, perfectly true. But, then, we do not reason thus in regard to natural things. Precisely the same thing may be said of the light of the material world. The sun shines, and will continue to bless and to beautify the world, whether we study the laws and the effects of its action or otherwise. No one, however, regards this as a reason why the science of optics should not be cultivated. The sun, it is true, rose and set, and answered all the great practical purposes of life, long before the science of optics was created, or conceived, or dreamt of by man. Still there is no branch of physical knowledge which has proved more useful or ornamental, which has contributed more to the comfort of human life, or more to the expansion of the human mind, than the science of optics. Why, then, should there not be an analogous science for the real "Light of the World," for "the Sun of Righteousness?" God is always like himself both in his dispensations and his acts. He gave us "the great light that rules by day;" but he did not give us the science of optics. He left this to be created by the devout and diligent student of his works. In like manner he bestowed "the Sun of Righteousness" on mankind; but he gave them no scientific analysis or exposition of the laws of its light or the modes of its action. This, no less than the science of optics, He requires of man, the lord and sovereign of this lower world. It is, we are told, "the glory of the Lord to conceal a thing;" but we are, at the same time, assured, by the same high authority, that "it is the glory of the King to search it out." This glory of the King is everywhere, in the material universe at least, magnificently displayed. We behold it in mechanics, in optics, in astronomy, and, in short, in the whole splendid retinue of the physical sciences. But where, we ask, is this glory manifested in relation to the infinitely more grand and beautiful system of the moral world? There, at least, the glory of the Lord is still concealed; and we poor, blind, ignorant, and desponding mortals dare not seek to raise or penetrate the awful veil. But this is no reason why we should not gladly welcome, and devoutly contemplate every gleam of the Divine Glory, which may struggle through that mysterious veil, and irradiate the dark obscurities of the dreadful scene of things in this lower part of the world.

There is one thing, at least, about which there can be no reasonable ground of controversy; namely, the end for which the moral world was made. Even Butler, the most cautious of all thinkers, does not hesitate to say: "We must conclude that the ultimate end designed in the constitution of Nature and the conduct of Providence is the most virtue and happiness possible." Aristotle, as every one knows, posits "happiness" as the ultimate aim or design of human existence; which is by no means a different view from that of Butler; since, in the system of Aristotle, "to energize according to virtue" is happiness. "Holiness according to wisdom" is, says Plato, the chief end of man. Hegel sets forth "freedom" as the ne plus ultra of human attainment; but then, in the highest sense of the word, he defines freedom to mean neither more nor less than virtue and happiness, than the perfection of man's intellectual and moral nature. In like manner, in the work of Guizot, this "virtue," this "holiness," this "freedom," this perfection of man's moral nature, is held up and exhibited as the supreme fact of civilization, as the grand aim of all human endeavor. There is, indeed, on this great fundamental point a substantial agreement among the great thinkers of all ages.

Let us say, then, that "freedom" is the ultimate end of human progress or civilization: meaning by the term freedom, not only a deliverance of the intellect from the dominion of ignorance and error, of the heart and affections from the reign of passion, prejudice, evil propensities, and all uncharitableness, and of the will from the debasing tyranny of bad habits, but also their restoration to the opposites of all these things. The term is used in this sense by the poet, when he says:

"He is the freeman whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves besides;"

and also by the pen of inspiration in the declaration that "where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." Freedom and liberty, in this sense of the word, is the object for which man was created, and toward which he should ever struggle in this state of probation. All laws and all institutions which retard the development of this freedom, are bad, and raise themselves in defiance of the design of Heaven. It was, indeed, for the attainment and the enjoyment of this liberty that man was endowed with the faculty of free will, and it is for the preservation and the promotion of this liberty that both the Church and the State are ordained of God. Both are, though in different sort and manner, in the order of His means for the rebuilding of the world: The one as feeding the inner life of society; the other as providing its external tenement: the one as the fountain of life and growth to its inner kernel or flower; the other as the external shell, or leafy envelope, to protect it from without. Thus civil liberty itself, however perfectly organized by the State, is only in the order of means for the attainment of moral freedom.

This being the great end, then, the philosophy of history, or of civilization, professes to exhibit and explain the causes, the influences, the agencies—call them what you will—by which this object is to be attained, at least in so far as it is on earth. Why, then, has it so little to say about Christianity? It was for the era of this religion that all preceding eras were intended to prepare the way; and it is from that era that all succeeding revolutions and changes have derived their most powerful and transforming influence. Hence it is the high office of the philosophy of history, if only true to its own definition of itself, especially to show how, and why, the Christian religion has produced so wonderful an effect on the condition of the world; to show why and how it acts as the heart of the world, as the sun and centre of the system to which it belongs. We want to see all the members of the one system, it is true, and all the planets of the other; but, above all, we want to see in each instance that which gives life, and light, and beauty to all the parts, as well as unites them all in one harmonious scheme.

Introduction to Analogy.

D. Lee, of Knox county, Tennessee, writes to the Country Gentleman that fair timbered mountain land can there be bought in large tracts at from $50 to $100 per thousand acres, or five to ten cents per acre.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1868

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

Notice to Subscribers.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

ANOTHER VOLUME.

O subscriber, your three dollars' worth of the Advocate—did you get it? Three dollars in shoes or calico goes no great way. It is not expected to. But in news, political, religious, agricultural, and other, it seems like a large investment. Many hesitate to venture so far. Those who intend to take another three dollars' worth will do us a favor by beginning with the year, so that we may print our mail lists as complete as possible. All subscriptions are stopped on the very day the subscription expires. No offense meant.

HOMER COLLEGE.

We learn that by some undue advantage a judgment was had against this college, and that it sold for only $1,100. That "denominational pressure" was at the bottom of the transaction. We hope that our people, for the love they bear the memory of the sainted Randall, for the love they bear the Methodist church, and for the sake of their own children and the future of North Louisinna, will rescue this college by entering at once upon the legal process necessary to set aside the judgment obtained, and by raising the few hundred dollars requisite to save a building which cost $20,000. Let him that hath a shirt sell it, sooner than see the education of his children pass into the hands of strangers, not to say enemies. A man had better wear sackcloth a year than allow such an interest to be sacrificed and lost forever to his church.

TO OUR AGENTS.

If each preacher will so far overstep the cautious deportment which he has heretofore maintained in the pulpit, as to actually take this copy of this Advocate in his hand, and venture to mention the fact to his audience that it is the organ of the Conference, and ask, "Who will subscribe to it?" we will be satisfied that he seriously wishes it well, and is trying to do his share to aid its support.

A CHURCH FAIR.

The ladies of Carondelet street, Felicity street, and Gretna Sabbath schools are demonstrating that an excellent Fair can be gotten up and sustained without raffling or punch. In place of the raffle they introduce a Magic Lantern, and for punch substitute music. It is well known that all good people in good times prefer walking without stilts. But in these times—are stilts allowable? Well, we shall see. We wait the verdict of all the straightforward godly people who for twenty years have given out and out what they had to give. It requires a strong combination of cheerful faces, in these days, to face the times. And old people, with their cares, can be helped out and brightened up by the fair countenances of the young, and the glee of little children—who only know to trust "father," "mother," "uncle," and "aunty," just as father, mother, uncle, and aunty ought to trust the Lord. It would be difficult for one to go into the Fair room and see the tables, and the arches of flowers, and the bright forms of youth which fill it, and be jostled by that stream of "grab-bags," and yet preserve those lines of thoughtful anxiety which habitually seam many a noble face. It is a great blessing to escape from the storm of finance, which is now raging, into the pleasant laughing harbor of this little assemblage; and though it be only for an hour, with the knowledge that one has to go out directly again and face the rough weather, yet the boldest seaman knows how to avail himself of every lull in the tempest. Oh! the precious art of being composed and cheerful in the midst of trouble! of having faith "unwavering" as that of a child, and strong as that of a man!

A fair may be turned into a huckstering fish-market, sort of bore, which forces itself on you, and into you, and leaves an impression on the memory of man like an Artesian augur—a dreadful machine, indeed, of charity, if charity it be. We have seen such: here "we have no such custom," as saith the Apostle. But this matter of eating: query, does it make people more generous? Is there anything inspiring in the rational satisfaction of a healthy and lawful appetite? Not to go back as far as Isaac and the pottage, nor to the Israelites, who had a good many feasts of "fat things" mixed up with their annual approachings at the temple, we cite the English Wesleyans. They, that is the English, religious or irreligious, are a wise, undecidedly smart people—in some respects, as in the matter of cotton culture—too wise for us; well, they use all the levers, in fact more than would be safe in this hot-blooded land—they never exclude punch. Their great financial meetings have a social expression which has its advantages. And if a man can indulge in good fellowship while subscribing to pay a church out of debt, or while bringing up the arrearage of the quarter by "dividing out," as many good stewards have done, we may safely trust that man for the balance of the year; he will have a good nature anywhere. Oh! this church melancholy, which seems to be settling down upon preachers and people; what a stronghold of Satan it promises to be! Jacob was never so near plenty as when out of the famine he gathered up a peace-offering and said, "carry down the man a little balm, and a little honey, spices, and myrrh, nuts, and almonds." Little thought he that the doors of plenty were about to be opened to him by the hand of his father's God. So hard and impracticable as things may seem, when a man's ways please the Lord, he shall be "in league with the stones of the field;" "in famine He will redeem him from death."

The Lord may not return to us the identical wealth we have lost, but he can give us other forms of it, and if not of it, yet of that which money cannot buy, a cheerful, hopeful, trustful, unselfish spirit.

This train of thought is all legitimate enough, because it went with the patriarch down into Egypt, and going into a church fair is going a little way into Egypt; very proper if one does not go too far, nor stay down there too long.

THE VOLCANO AND THE CONSTITUTION.

This part of the South is rapidly subsiding to a condition which may defy the most extreme Radical rapacity. The incisive acquisitiveness of that large body of patriots who have recently poured themselves from the banks of the Connecticut, the Monongahela, and the Wabash, upon these latitudes, may be unlimited, but four years of war, one of Butler, two of overflow, army worm, and the Military Bill have certainly narrowed their field of operation. The track of the Eastern locust is scarcely to be distinguished by the eye from that of a stream of lava; but while the effect of the one is superficial and temporary, that of the other is deep and lasting. In a single week vegetation lifts its vigorous spires above the surface, turns the scoria of that crawling death-flood into food, and changes the blackened waste into an undulating expanse of living verdure. But a long period must pass before the path of the lava can be transformed into the luxurious vineyard. The immediate injury from the volcanic stream has been too great, and it has penetrated too far to be readily overcome, even by the most active recuperative force that nature can supply. So, the war-track of the hordes which irrupted into the fertile plains and valleys of the South, led by Sherman or Sheridan, like the locusts of the Apocalypse, devoured every good thing, and left only in its wake a death-stench and cinder, as from the march of the fire-plated hosts of Abaddon. This was a damage huge and bad enough, but not irreparable. Within one year, under the amnesty proclamation, the enterprise and vitality of the Southern people began to show itself in many hopeful forms. Had things been let alone, it is reasonable to believe that by this time commerce, finance, agriculture, and manufactures would have not only recovered from the shock of war, but would have derived fresh impulse and new forms from its elementary disturbance. But after the locust came the volcano. The sword was sheathed and the firelock stacked, the slave freed, but the South was not sufficiently stripped and humbled. Then came Congress the 39th, thrice memorable; the fruitful source of woe, vomiting forth its bills, Military, Office-Tenure, and others, which, destroying the real source of national prosperity, now threaten, as with an earthquake, the very ground of our national existence.

The Constitution of the United States, in its operative, rightful force, pervades all the affairs and interests of every State, and of every household within the broad limits of this continent, from the shores of the Atlantic to the Pacific slopes, from the cold Lakes to the tropic Gulf. It protects a man equally in the highest rights of representation, of person, and of property, whether sitting as a senator among senators, or as a man at home, in the midst of his family. The Constitutional law of the land creates equally States, senates, courts, military chieftains, judges; all the machinery and men of government, from a Congress to a jury, and from a President to a tide-waiter. It is the recorded will of the people written with a diamond, without which will Mr. Sumner, Senator, is no more than Mr. John Smith, gentleman. To attack and destroy this primordial law is to attack and destroy the entire structure of this government; it is a revolution, in all its height, depth, and breadth. The Congress that attempts it attempts self-destruction. One cannot, therefore, wonder that the measures which have passed, and are now passing, this body, are felt at this hour as the paralysis of death shooting through the extremities of the Union. As the people of Naples say, "The volcano is in successful operation."

Here is the direct cause of the want and poverty which we see upon all sides, and which check even the voracious enterprise of the post-diluvian Yankee. The trouble at the bottom of all is, and ever has been, a lack of respect for Constitutional law. This is an earthly kingdom which cannot be moved—without a world of disaster. The first attack upon it came from New England. It may be found in the statutes of Massachusetts; and from that hour to this the evil has gone on, increasing yearly in volume and violence. The prosperity of the whole land depends upon the possibility of a return to that instrument of all diffusive good; otherwise the whole country will presently consist of but two classes, those who wish to steal, and those who have nothing to steal. This will be the condition of nine millions of white people, at the least.

The diffusive nature of misfortune and evil will prevent us—indeed, already has—from supposing that a "temptation" has befallen the South not common to others. The poverty of nine millions of people must become that of twenty-nine. The destruction of the Supreme Court affects equally Maine and Mississippi. The absorption of the Executive and the Judiciary by the Congress, if successful, will overturn the Constitution by which the whole government of the whole country proceeds, and such violence can no more be confined in its effects than one can confine hydraulic pressure to a single square inch of the fluid. If New York, Massachusetts, and Ohio assert the Constitution as against Congress, they must assert it for us as well as for themselves. This they surely will do. The law of self-preservation will force them to it. The "reconstruction" of the South has therefore become a secondary matter; the great question now is—Shall the Constitution be preserved? We see in this a more sure ground for hope to the South than has yet appeared above the waters. If this do not prove to be Ararat, we know not when the flood will assuage. The New York Times (Radical) confirms these views in a recent editorial. Speaking of the new Reconstruction Act, it says:

A party whose leaders trample on the Constitution, because it impedes their operations, cannot long retain the confidence of the country; and when their overthrow comes—as come it must—what will be the fate of their policy? what the upshot of their plotting and legislating and usurping? These are inquiries which concern more than themselves, for they indicate the reopening of the Southern question, and the reconstructing of reconstruction as consequences of the recklessness which marks the Radical programme.

CRAPS ST. GERMAN CHURCH.

The pastor of this church rejoices in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon his people. There have been a number of mourners at the altar, and during the last few nights a number of conversions.

Another Great Popular Loan.

It is commonly known that the General government, for wise purposes, has given its aid and encouragement to the construction of one main through line of railroad from the Pacific ocean across the Territories, to connect with the various eastern branches of the Pacific Railroad system, and which will form the grand trunk route to the far West, upon which the mighty trans-continental traffic will concentrate.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company—who are carrying it forward with greater energy and persistence than was ever shown in any similar work in ancient or modern times—will build, equip, own, and control the western half of this through line, the most productive, favored, and valuable portion of the whole, and may justly be regarded as possessing the richest franchise ever granted on this continent.

The act of Congress confers upon the corporations, beside the right of way across the Territories, a gift of 12,800 acres of the public lands per mile, contiguous to this line, and an appropriation from the national credit of sixty millions in 6 per cent. bonds, delivered as the work progresses, or half the estimated cost of the through line and branches. These subsidy bonds the companies may cancel in a course of years by the transportation services of the roads, and a small per centage of its net earnings; they therefore constitute an element of great strength to the corporations.

The act further authorizes them to issue an equal amount of their own first mortgage bonds of corresponding denominations, which shall be the first claim upon the whole railroad property, and to which the lien of the government shall be subordinate.

The great Central Pacific Railroad is, therefore, in an important sense, a semi-national work, aided and commended by the people, the legislative power, and the executive officers, though its management is administered with all the care and forethought of the most eminent private corporations. Being under the constant supervision of the government—who, being the principal creditor, accepts a subordinate and contingent lien—with so large an amount of additional capital also invested in the property pledged, it is believed that no securities now offered in the market possess the same claims to confidence and market value except those of the government.

Under these favoring auspices very gratifying progress has been made in extending the railroad track from both directions. Nearly 1,000 miles of the main line and converging branches, between the Missouri River and the base of the Rocky Mountains, have been built within three years. The Central Pacific Railroad has also steadily and successfully carried the main stem line from the steamboat navigation of the Pacific to the summit of the Sierra Nevadas, and into the great Salt Lake Basin east of the California line. Having overcome by far the most difficult and expensive portion of the whole line, the probabilities of the through connection with the eastern lines being effected in 1870 amount to certainty.

The prominent feature in the progress of the Central Pacific Railroad is the remarkably large and profitable local business which is developed upon the completed portion: more than justifying the estimates of its projectors—that the immense traffic between the ports of California and the mining regions of the interior would sustain a first-class railroad line, even if the overland connection were not built. The net profit upon operating the link of less than 100 miles thus far reaches nearly two millions in gold; and this ratio will be doubled during the coming season, when the cattle-mountain transit is made by the locomotive. With every extension of the track the business and profits of the completed part are increased; so that when the overland through traffic shall be centered upon the Central Road the general prosperity of the company will be without parallel, and its securities appreciated correspondingly.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

By the last steamer from Belize we have private letters which state that the cholera is epidemic at that point. "The mortality is about five a day, exclusively among the lower classes." From others we hear that, pecuniarily, the times there, among American emigrants, are about as hard as they are here with us.

Munich boasts of possessing the largest bronze statue in the world. The colossal figure represents the protectress of Bavaria, with a huge lion by her side. The height of the figure's 63 feet; weight 230,000 pounds. It stands on a granite pedestal 30 feet in height, through which a spiral stairway leads to the head of the figure, where are seats provided for eight persons.

A Generous Burglar, who is said to have been recently transported to Australia for breaking open a safe, made a draft of a model safe which he believes thief proof, and sent it to one of his victims as a compensation for the injury which he has inflicted upon him.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Washington, Jan 20.—It is reported that a majority of the Judges of the Supreme Court are in favor of placing the McCardle case upon the docket for an early hearing.

The President's reception to-night was the most brilliant of the season, and notwithstanding the inclement weather was numerously attended. A number of Congressmen, military officers, members of the Cabinet and of the diplomatic corps were present. The ladies' costumes were said to be the most costly and elegant that have been seen at any reception in this city.

It is said that Mr. Staaton has authorized a statement in the papers that he has been advised by Gens. Grant and Sherman to resign. Your correspondent's assertion that those distinguished officers had advised Stanton to resign was based upon what they themselves have said upon the subject, and whether they did, in fact, go to Mr. Stanton and say to him that he should give up the office, or not, your correspondent now states unqualifiedly that both Gens Grant and Sherman told the President that they would go to Stanton and give him their opinion that he ought to resign the office of Secretary of War. Gen. Grant had an interview with the President yesterday, and left with the avowed purpose of going immediately to Stanton and giving the advice above indicated. These are facts about which there will be no difficulty between the President, Gens. Grant and Sherman.—N. O. Times.

Washington, Jan 20.—Carey, from Cincinnati, to-day, during the discussion, propounded the following questions to his colleagues:

1. If Gen. Grant shall refuse or neglect to execute the provisions of this law, or if in its execution he shall act in an oppressive or cruel manner, to what tribunal would he be amenable for his malfeasance?

2. As by the terms of the bill the President cannot interfere, can the General be tried by court martial, and if so, who can order and who can institute the court?

3. Not being a civil officer, can he be impeached, and if so, by whom and before what tribunal?

4. If he cannot be tried by any earthly tribunal, is he not made an absolute despot?

A member of the committee refuses to go there, and writes Stevens that he will move that the House refuse consideration of business prepared by the committee except in stated meeting at proper places.

PASSAGE OF THE NEW RECONSTRUCTION BILL.

Washington, Jan. 21.—Senate.—Sumner presented a petition of citizens of Texas, alleging that the Federal officers in that State are non-residents, are generally not in sympathy with the Union men, but favor the policy of the Administration. Memorialists pray the Senate to withhold further confirmation of such, as there are enough loyal Texans to fill these offices.

The president was requested to inform the Senate whether James Seddon, whom the President recently pardoned, was Secretary of War of the Confederate States while Wirz was keeper of the Andersonville prison, and also how many Union soldiers died from starvation and other cruelties inflicted in violation of civilized war during Seddon's secretaryship.

House.—After an ineffectual effort to amend, supported by Butler, Stevens and Kelly, the reconstruction bill, as reported by the committee, passed—yeas, 123; nays, 45—Carey, of Ohio, and Stewart, of New York, only voting with the Democrats.

The Secretary of War is directed to issue, for the relief of all classes in the South, the desiccated vegetables that had accumulated during the war.

The Postoffice Committee reported a bill authorizing the New Orleans, Mobile and Chattanooga Railroad Company to build and maintain bridges over the navigable streams on the route, and declaring road bridges post routes.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION CONVENTION.

Atlanta, Jan. 21.—The Convention adopted, by 92 to 42, the following:

Whereas, The reconstruction acts recognize the existence of a government within the limits of Georgia, subject to the military commander of the district, and the paramount authority of Congress under which certain officials hold office; and

Whereas, The time for which said officials were elected, as set forth in the laws allowed to operate within said limits, has expired, and said officials hold office only by reason of a failure to provide for their successors; and

Whereas, A great many of said officials are hostile to, and are insidiously using their influence against the restoration of Georgia to the Union, and by so doing are not only seriously retarding the work of reconstruction, but also materially affecting the prosperity of the State; therefore

Resolved, That the Convention do hereby request the legislative department of the government of the United States to authorize this body to declare vacant the chief executive office of the State, and to fill the same, as well as to provide for the removal through the chief executive officer of the State thus selected, of all persons who are hostile to reconstruction, and the filling of such vacancies by said executive.

Resolved, That the Convention, in justice to the friends of reconstruction under the reconstruction acts, do hereby request the department aforesaid to relieve all such of existing disabilities, that they may be eligible to fill any vacancies thus created.

Resolved, That the Convention do further regret the modification of the test oath so as to admit of all persons who have aided or abetted the late war against the United States holding office therein, provided such person heartily regret the past, and if earnestly attached to and determined to labor for the reunion of the States on the basis of the reconstruction acts.

Copies were ordered to be sent to the President, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

The Convention refused to have afternoon sessions or to limit speeches, ordered the hall to be ventilated every morning, and adjourned.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONSERVATIVE AND UNION CONVENTIONS IN TEXAS.

GALVESTON, Jan. 21.—The Conservative State Convention of Texas was organized at Houston yesterday at 4 o'clock P. M. Col. C. Carter was elected president, and D. W. Shannon secretary.

Another Convention, called the McMahon Convention, was also organized there at the same time, of which John Hancock was elected president, and John C. Cowan secretary.

They have had a conference, and will probably unite on one platform.

In the McMahon Convention resolutions were passed advocating the recognition of the settlement of the issues of the war by the arbitrament of arms, on the basis of the abrogation of the ideas of war and recognition of civil rights, and full equality and justice to all before the law; that it is the interest of all to reconstruct the State of Texas under the reconstruction laws of Congress, and favoring an immediate political organization for that purpose.

Pledging to Major Gen. Hancock, Commander of the Fifth Military District, faithful compliance with obligations taken to the United States government, and recognizing his declaration of the supremacy of civil law as a guarantee that law and not partisan uses will be regarded. That they are pleased that the President has given this declaration his official approval.

It is now thought the two Conventions will harmonize and act together.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—There was a full Cabinet meeting to day except Stanton.

The Senate Judiciary Committee will consider to-morrow morning the House bill changing the Supreme Court. It is understood the committee stand three in favor of, and four opposed to the bill.

Chase, Swayne and Miller opposed advancing the McCardle case.

A bill has been introduced into the Senate requiring the additional consent of the Senate in appointing general or special agents, and providing that the tenure of office of all general or special agents now employed by the President or the departments shall expire thirty days after the passage of this act.

Supreme Court.—The exparte McCardle case. Chase announced that a majority of the justices thought the motion of appellant should be allowed. It was therefore ordered that the case be advanced on the docket, and assigned for a hearing on the first Monday of March.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—In a conversation respecting the present situation and his future purposes, the President said: "A modification, perhaps I might say an entire change, of public sentiment in the North has been the consequence. One who held fast to a principle when a majority was arrayed against him is not likely to loosen his hold upon it when so much of the pressure has been removed.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION CONVENTION.

JACKSON, JAN. 22.—Convention.—Rules suspended to receive reports. Special and standing committees report requesting the General Commanding to suspend the collection of taxes for 1867 on all persons not allowed representation, was received.

The Committee on Memorial to Congress to vacate all State offices made a majority report, reciting that the loyal people of Mississippi require the immediate aid of Congress to remove obstructions impeding the action of their representatives in Convention assembled; that the State government is administered by rebels, not in name merely, but in heart, head and policy—indeed, in all respects save open hostility; that the great mass of the Southern people manifest absolute and unmistakable hostility to reconstruction.

The faithful Union men and loyalists have met proscription with calm defiance and unfaltering devotion to the country, liberty and union, and now this rebel sentiment has culminated on the floor of this Convention by a member, in a report to this body, averring that the Convention was an unauthorized assembly, called by an unconstitutional law of Congress, and has, therefore, no legal or binding power over the State of Mississippi in compelling obedience to its ordinances.

The officials administering the provisional governments of the State, and whose terms of office have expired, but who have been continued in office by the forbearance of Congress, have neglected to protect life and property of loyal men, and have used, and will continue to use their power to prevent the growth of loyalty and the restoration of peace and order; at least their action or non-action may result greatly to the embarrassment of the Convention in the work of reconstruction; we therefore, in the name and in behalf of the loyal people of Mississippi—in the name of justice, liberty and humanity—most earnestly and respectfully petition your honorable bodies to authorize this Convention to declare the civil offices of the State vacant, and to fill them at once by the appointment of true and loyal men, whom we believe can greatly add to the success of the Congressional plan of reconstruction.

A minority from the same committee reported that as Congress had confided State affairs to the military commander of the district, and as the bill now pending before Congress will in all probability soon pass, giving Gen. Grant supervising power over all the military districts, thus securing a more just and efficient government in this and all other Southern States, and as Congress recently defeated a resolution to vacate State offices and empower conventions to fill them; and as there will probably be a speedy change from military to civil government, established by the vote of the people of the State, we therefore deem it inexpedient to memorialize Congress on the subject.

No action taken on either report.

MARRIED.

On the 12th of December, 1867, by the Rev. Joseph D. Newsom, of Carroll county, Mississippi, at the residence of Mr. B. H. McGee, Mr. RICHARD ELMON to Miss MARTHA E. MCGEE. At the same time and place, Mr. JOSEPH MORE to Miss BETTIE HERBERT, all of Holmes county, Mississippi.

On the 29th of December, 1867, by the same, at the residence of Mr. Wm. Stark, Mr. GEORGE R. WILSON to Miss CINTHIA MAXWELL, of Holmes county, Mississippi.

By the Rev. J. Pipes, December 31, 1867, the Rev. THOMAS W. SCOTT to Miss H. A. FOSTER, of Desoto, La.

OBITUARIES.

SAMUEL AVRA was born in Johnson county, North Carolina, November 4, 1783. In the same county and State he grew up to manhood, and married Miss Lucinda Lane, who in feebleness and age still survives him. In 1820 he removed to the city of Raleigh, where in 1821 he professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1830 he removed to the State of Alabama, and from thence, in 1844, to the State of Mississippi, where he resided until God called him hence. He died November 22d, 1867, in the eighteth year of his age. From his first connection with the church he lived a consistent and Godly life. Forty-six years he toiled on in his earthly pilgrimage, and was never known, by those who knew him longest, to falter in his course. He was always consistent, and under trial was governed by the spirit of the gospel. Though a man of spirit, he was never known to give way to violent temper. For years before his death he was too much enfeebled by old age to go in and out before his people, as at other times. He knew that he was not long for this world, and spoke of death as no unwelcome messenger, and often spoke of his comfortable assurance of an inheritance beyond the grave. With the grey hairs of age giving place to a second blackness of youth, without any visible disease, the functions of life ceased to play their part, and Father Avra had passed away from earth, leaving a memory to be cherished among us.

JOSEPH D. NEWSOM.

Died, at "Highlands," near Rodney, Mississippi, Saturday, January 4, 1868, CHARLES LYLE WILLIAMS, infant son of Dr. R. A. and Texanna New, aged six days.

NOT LOST, BUT GONE BEFORE.

My child! my child! and art thou gone
Away from earthly scenes? Am I bereft? but not alone,
For God in mercy means
To purify my earthly mind;
And fit me for the skies.

My heart is sad, my hopes are dull,
But bright'ning visions loom
Amid the lightning-riven cloud
That hangs all o'er in gloom.
Then, farewell, lov'd one. Hope still points
To glorious scenes above.

Thu idol of our heart and home
God deem'd thou wouldst have been;
While angel bands did bid thee come
Away from grief and sin,
To dwell forever in thy home
Where all are pure within.

Thy glorious home I soon shall reach,
And join thee in the place
Where all in peace and bliss and love
Behold the Saviour's face.
My child! my child! my angel boy,
Lost thou art not, but gone before.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST

IN GOLD COIN.

THE BEST INVESTMENT

FOR SURPLUS CAPITAL.

THE ATTENTION OF INVESTors, Trustees, Executors, and others desiring an unusually safe, reliable, and profitable form of permanent investment, is called to the advantages and assurances of the

Central Pacific Railroad

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company offer for sale their FIRST MORTGAGE THIRTY-YEAR, SIX PER CENT GOLD BONDS, and submit to investors the following, among other obvious considerations, and invite a comparison with the merits and excellences of any class of corporate securities:

I. These bonds are based upon the most vital and valuable part of the grand National Pacific Railroad, soon to become the main channel of communication on the continent

II. The local settlement and the business therefrom is remarkably large and profitable, and must constantly increase

III. The hardest part of the road is now built, and the remainder will be rapidly carried forward over the Salt Lake plains

IV. The greater part of the means necessary to build the road is provided by the United States Government upon a subordinate lien

V. The State and chief cities of California have contributed upward of $3,000,000 to the enterprise, without lien

VI. The grant of land is destined at an early day to prove of far greater market value than the total of the first mortgage bonds issued upon the road and equipments

VII. This road lies altogether among the gold and silver producing regions, and its revenues are received in coin

VIII. The management of this Company has been distinguished for prudence and economy, and the surplus earnings, after payment of expenses and interest, are devoted to construction purposes

IX. The interest liabilities of the Company upon the portion now in operation are less than a third the net earnings.

X. Both principal and interest are payable IN GOLD, under special provisions of both National and State enactment

The bonds are in sums of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in January and July, and are offered for sale at 95 per cent of their par value and accrued interest from July 1 added, in currency

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

"WELCOME, PAPA."

Three little heads, in the twilight gray,
Scanning the shadows across the way:
Six little eyes, one black and two blue,
Brimful of love and happiness too,
Watching for pa.

May, with placid and thoughtful brow,
Gentle face, beaming with smiles just now
Willie, the rogue as loving and gay,
Stealing sly kisses from sister May,
Watching for pa.

Nelly, with fragrets of sunny hue,
Cosily nestled between the two,
Pressing her cheek to the window-pane,
Wishing the absent one home again,
Watching for pa.

Oh, how they gaze at the passers-by!
"He's coming at last!" they gayly cry.
"Look again, my pets!" exclaims mamma;
And Nelly adds, "There's the twilight star
Watching for pa."

Soon joyous shouts from the window-seat,
And eager patter of childish feet;
Gay musical chimes ring through the hall,
A manly voice resounds to the call,
"Welcome, papa!"

'Cause They Killed Him."

A gentleman in London once told the story of the Saviour's suffering to a crowd of little dirty boot-blacks who had been rude to him, and distributing a little money to them, promised to see them again. Sometime afterward he met one of them in the street, but did not recognize him. The following is the dialogue that ensued, and the story of the result of a good man's word in time:

"Please, sir, I'm Jack."

"Jack—Jack who?"

"Only Jack Hine—please, sir."

All at once it came across him who the lad was. "I remember you now," he said. "Have you tried to keep your promise to love the Lord Jesus, and show how much you love Him by obeying Him?"

"Yes, sir, I have; indeed I have," he answered earnestly.

Inexpressibly delighted, the gentleman stopped and talked to him a little, making an excuse by letting him clean his shoes.

"Can you read, Jack?" he asked.

"Yes, sir; not over well, but I can make shift to spell out a page."

"Would you like a Testament of your own, where you could read for yourself the story you heard the other night?"

There was no answer, but half a chuckle of happiness at the bare idea. There was no pretence about the lad. The dirty little thief had set his face heavenward.

"I see you would like it, Jack," added his friend. "Come to my rooms at —— to-morrow, and you shall have one. Good-by."

Exactly at the appointed time, on the morrow, came one modest, eager tap at the door. In walked Jack. He had been to some neighboring pump, poor fellow, and washed himself—not clean, but streaky. He had plastered his hair down meekly in honor of his visit. There was nothing "taking" with him. He was very ugly; and had it not been for an humble, repentant look, would have been repulsive. That, however, he was not. The gentleman shook hands with him, and made him sit by him.

"Jack, why do you want a Testament?"

"To read about Him you told us of," said he, shortly.

"Why do you want to read about Him? Because you love Him?"

Jack nodded once, shortly and decisively. There was no doubt about the matter, not a whit.

"Why do you love Him?"

Jack was quite silent. His little, ordinary features moved in a singular way; his eyes twinkled; his breast heaved. All at once he dropped his head on the table sobbing as if his heart would break. "'Cause they killed him," gasped poor Jack. It was with some difficulty the gentleman restrained his own tears. The fervent belief in the Lord's death—the clear view which he had of it, that it was for him, and that he did in no way deserve it—had melted his poor little wandering heart as it had never been melted before.

"A DARLING" is the dear little beaming girl who meets one on the door-steps, who flings her fair arms around one's neck, and kisses one with her whole soul of love; who seizes one's hat, who relieves one of one's coat, and hands the tea and toast so prettily; who places her elfish form at the piano, and warbles forth, unsolicited, such delicious songs; who casts herself at one's footstool, and claps one's hand, and asks eager, unheard—of questions with such bright eyes and flashing face, and on whose light glossy curls one places one's hand and breathes, "God bless her!" as the fairy form departs. But there is an angel following in her footsteps, who is not visible to us, but who is anxious to bear our darling from us, and in the mind's eye its white shadow flits between us and the darling of our heart.

SCIENTIFIC.

STEREOTYPING WITH PAPER.

This is now in common use in all the principal daily newspaper establishments in New York. It is conducted substantially as follows: The stereotyper first dries the form of types upon an iron steam table. The form is then partially unlocked and a hand brush is rubbed over the surface of the types, cleansing them preparatory to placing over the entire form a sheet or sheets of thin bank note paper, of the finest quality, previously wetted to insure the required pliability. This paper being evenly laid over the types, the workman takes a long-handled brush made of short stiff bristles, with which he beats the wet paper evenly, forcing it into all the depressions of the types, taking care not to break the paper. This work finished, a dampened sheet of thicker but more ordinary paper is placed over the first. This is also brush-hammered down upon the types, and followed by another sheet of paper, thinly coated with a preparation of whiting and starch. Again the brush is used to beat this home, after which a brown paper backing is put on, and then the form of types, covered by the before-mentioned sheets of paper, is trundled to another steam table, where it is slid under a powerful screw press, several blankets folded over it, and all firmly held down until the paper matrix is dry-hard oned, or "cooked," as the workmen express it. The papering process occupies three or four minutes, the cooking about twice as many. The matrix is now peeled off from the form and prepared for casting, by sifting it with finely powdered borax, which with a soft brush is thoroughly rubbed into the sunken surface left by the types. The surplus borax having been removed, the matrix (which now resembles hard but pliable pasteboard) is ready for the casting box, which is made of iron, either straight or curved, to suit the press bed. Handled irons hold the matrix in its proper place, at the exact distance (about half an inch) necessary for the thickness of the stereotype plate, which is made by pouring a quantity of hot type metal into an open end of the casting box. This metal, dropping between one surface of the casting box and the sunken surface of the matrix, fills up the latter without burning it. A few moments are allowed for cooling, and then the matrix is stripped from the warm plate, which is subsequently prepared for the press by trimming down all thick lines, or chiseling away any superfluous metal, paring off the edges, filing and otherwise treating the stereotype after the usual manner. Circular saws driven by steam power, and hand cutting machinery of various kinds are used in finishing, the whole operation of stereotyping occupying from fifteen to twenty minutes. A second plate may be obtained from the original matrix in about two minutes, and almost any number of castings can be taken by careful workmen. In some offices only one mold is taken, this being used for casting the number of plates required for several presses. The stereotype, being an exact reproduction, in solid plate form, of the million or more types originally put together by the compositors, is fastened upon the Hoe, Bullock, or any other printing press, and used in place of the types. The advantage of duplicating the plates is apparent. Two or ten presses, working similar plates, will print off in a couple of hours an edition of twenty or a hundred thousand copies, which formerly occupied so much more time that when ten or twelve-cylinder "fast" presses became "slow," second and third editions were resorted to by editors desirous of giving the public the latest news. Previous to the use of stereotypes for newspaper purposes, duplicate forms were sometimes "set up" in type, an extra expense to the office adopting this course, which was incurred only whenever a pressure of important news was likely to prevent the forms going to a single press in season for working off the edition. Compositors can now work until 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, and half an hour later half a dozen "duplicates" of their work may be seen on as many different presses, striking off the printed sheets, units of an immense edition of perhaps seventy-five or eighty thousand copies of some newspaper, all of which are frequently counted and delivered to the carriers and newsmen before the editors, compositors or stereotypers can reach their homes and retire to rest.—Scientific American.

THE Country Gentleman says: "The materials and labor required to build and keep fences in repair are among the heavy items of farm expense. The cost of the land upon which they stand is another item."

FARM AND GARDEN.

From the Southern Cultivator.

HOP CULTURE.

A subscriber in Southern Georgia applies to us for information concerning the culture of hops. We publish the subjoined article for his benefit—also to direct the attention of others to this crop. It has proved a very remunerative one in the Western States, and might possibly be introduced with profit in the South. The plant grows wild in the warm climate of South eastern Europe:

In a late letter I made some reference to the culture of hops. Since it was written I have taken some pains to inform myself fully on the subject, and I find that the advantages it offers are greater by far than those of any crop grown in the South. General Newberry, one of the proprietors of the Cocktaile Brewery, has had many years' experience in the business, and it is chiefly from him that I have gleaned the following particulars:

The soil best adapted to the culture is a good loam, resting on a clay foundation. Such a soil holds manure better than one resting on a sandy sub-soil; and it is not desirable that the roots should penetrate to a great depth. It should, however, be broken up deep, and reduced to a fine till. Any ground that will grow tobacco is well suited for hops. Of course it should be well manured, as for tobacco.

The land being prepared, it is then laid off in rows eight feet by seven. The laying off should be done very accurately—if necessary, by a line. At the intersections the roots are to be planted, five in each place, arranged in a circular form, leaving an open space in the centre of about six inches diameter. They are to be set with a dibble, not vertically, but at an angle with the horizon of say thirty degrees.

The plantings are sections of the roots, five or six inches long. These are taken from old vines after they have come into bearing. It requires three bushels of these to plant an acre. They are now worth from six to ten dollars per bushel, being in great demand, and consequently higher than usual. The proper time for planting is in April.

It must always be borne in mind by the planter that the hop is a dioecious plant—that is, that the male and female blossoms are borne on separate plants. It is necessary, therefore, to have a certain proportion of each, say one male to eight females. It is the latter that are prolific, the blossoms being fertilized by the pollen from the blossoms of the male, like the silk of corn from the pollen of the tassels. Without this precaution the crop will prove to be little better than an abortion.

The cultivation the first year after planting is very simple, consisting in nothing more than keeping the ground clean of grass and weeds, as in the case of tobacco. The vines are allowed to run at random.

The second year they are to be staked, or rather "polled." For this purpose poles are to be provided which will stand twenty feet above ground. A less height will not be sufficient for a full crop. The butt ends are sharpened in a long tapering form; the holes are made to a proper depth by means of a crow-bar, and the poles then securely set. There must be two to each hill, outside of the crown of the vines, and in the line on which the plants stand at the greatest distance apart. The staking is to be done in May, the second season, and after the plants have received their first working. After the vines have made a good start select four of the best shoots and train them, two to each pole, supporting them at first by strings loosely tied, so as not to cut the vine by pressure. Two tyings are deemed sufficient. As soon as the vines have gained a firm support on the poles, and are out of danger, the hill is to be cleared of all superfluous growths by pulling up every remaining shoot, breaking them off at the junction with the parent roots.

All this, doubtless, involves much trouble and expense, but the profits justify the whole and much more. A crop of hops ranges from 1,200 pounds to 2,000 pounds per acre; and for several years they have been worth from sixty to seventy cents per pound in the Northern markets. New hops are always in great demand at a high price; and we at the South have all the advantages of an early market in respect to this article, which the fruit growers of Norfolk possess in their early peaches and strawberries. General Newberry informs me that he sent his crop of hops this year to New York, and being early in the market, they readily commanded one dollar per pound. It is no delusion, therefore, but a fact which has been demonstrated, and may be demonstrated again by any body who sets about the work intelligently, that a gross profit of from $1,500 to $2,000 per acre may be realized by the Virginia planter from the culture of hops. Cotton and tobacco, to which our people seem to be indissolubly wedded, bear no comparison to such profits.

The hop growers of the North, who have made the business a specialty, have made large fortunes; and that, too, at a time, as before the war, when hops were not worth more than 12½ to 15 cents per pound. There is no probability that the demand will ever be less than it is now; for in England it is steadily on the increase, and has been for a series of years.—S., in Richmond Dispatch.

A SINGLE HANDFUL OF MANURE put into a hill of corn will often make the difference between four or five little "nubbins," and six or eight great plump ears that will shell their bulk of sound corn. A thousand handfuls count up heavily in the autumn corn crib. How many handfuls of manure are daily lost in your stock-yard that might be saved in nice order by a little care in heaping up, and covering from washing rain? These handfuls of manure are more valuable to the cultivator than the separate grains of gold that the miner, with careful toil, gathers and washes from the earth and sand bank. He hunts, gathers, and saves them all, and thus accumulates his "pile." Philosophical, successful cultivators can see the glitter of gold even in the manure heap; they only wait a little longer than the miner for the pure gold to be washed out by the growing process, instead of in the washpan. "A word to the wise is sufficient."—American Agriculturist.

ONE HANDFUL OF HAY is a small matter; one handful a day for six months makes a pretty large bundle; twenty handfuls a day for six months make quite a stack; if each handful weighs a pound, the stack will equal 3,650 pounds, or more than 1¾ tons—worth about $22, at $12 a ton; or $36.50, at $20 a ton. How many farmers, keeping twenty animals, allow each to waste a handful or a pound of hay a day for want of a little attention to the feeding arrangements? A few straws at a time, dropped here and there, and trampled under the feet, will soon make a handful, and we have seen above what the handfuls amount to. This is a small matter, says one, but upon just such small matters depends a man's success or failure. One man attends to them and at the end of twenty or thirty years has a competence for old age; another neglects them, and is always behindhand. The lives and dies short in the pocket and short in comfort.—American Agriculturist.

MAN is an important agency in agriculture. The vital power may exist in the seed, but care and skill are required in the development of it. "Although man cannot act directly upon the functions of plants, he can modify and control to a certain extent the influence of other agents upon these plants. Thought, as well as hard work, is necessary to make a successful farmer. It is a mistaken idea that a good education is of no practical value to the tiller of the soil. Unless he understands the principles of science, the influence of atmosphere, the chemical properties of soil, etc., he cannot properly develop the vital power of seed, and justly advance the important interests of agriculture.—American Farmer.

A HANDFUL OF HAY.—Suppose an animal in a warm stable to require 15 pounds of hay a day to supply the waste and growth of the body, and keep up the heat. A small crack to let in a stream of cold air will necessitate at least another pound of hay per day to furnish the extra internal heat required. Even the difference between a cold and warm shed will often increase the consumption of hay by two or three pounds a day. A single wind break or screen of evergreens or straw, or a tight fence, may save two pounds a day on each animal thus sheltered. "A word to the wise is sufficient."—American Agriculturist.

BEST USE FOR WOOD ASHES.—They should be kept dry, and free from chips and sweepings, and bones. If bones that would be long decaying, and that cannot easily be broken up fine, are burned in the fire, they may be pounded fine, and may then be left in the ashes. There is no garden or field crop which ashes do not benefit. Perhaps the best use for a portion, at least, is in the onion bed. Leaf mould composted with ashes, makes an excellent dressing for strawberries, worked into the surface between the plants.—American Agriculturist.

THE Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle begs the cotton planters of the State to give at least one-fourth of their best lands this year to wheat, assuring them that the latter will prove the more profitable crop.

TENTH SESSION.

The exercises of the school will be resumed on Wednesday, October, 2d, 1867.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education:

Particular care is bestowed on the moral and social culture of the pupils.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a satchel for dirty clothes.

It is urgently requested that Students be prompt in their attendance. A few days absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS: Board and Tuition per session, $360.

PAYMENTS.—$200 in advance—balance 1st March.

Tuition of Day Scholars, per session, $75 00 payable—one half in advance—balance 1st March.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the School demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as Teachers, gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent, to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev. E. C. Dargan, D.D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All Louisiana and all Mississippi, south of the 33d parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Church congregations in its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: upon through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $50 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, its income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently asks the aid of all friends of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S.: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donations and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing members of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body, all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,

BROOKHAVEN, MISS

[illegible] miles from New Orleans, on N. O. J & G. N. Rail Road.

The next session will open on Wednesday, the 11th of September, 1867.

There is a full corps of teachers; the instruction will be thorough; the discipline firm and strict.

The building is large and well arranged; the play ground ample; the location healthy.

The institution is under control of the M. E. Church, South.

The entire expenses in the Collegiate Department for board, tuition, books and incidentals (not including music and the ornamental branches) need not exceed $125 00 for term of twenty weeks.

Each boarder must furnish her towels, one set of blankets and sheets.

For further information, address

REV. H. F. JOHNSON,
aug4 (Pres't Whitworth Female College.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1838, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated and all the different operations of Cooking, performed with a saving of fuel of Less Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

At the same time roasting it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For roasting the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious ash can be used. That meats roasted in an open area are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for boiling in the front hearth, thus enabling this important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than in the Oven. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, we confidently recommend it to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, we also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, and we may offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

☞ Liberal Inducements to Agents,

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From [illegible], Jr. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited no new feature since our last issue. The wholesale trade continues remarkably dull for the season, and we hear reiterated complaints on the subject from nearly every branch of business. Nothing has been reported in tobacco, and the movement in Western produce has been on a limited scale, with only a slight influence from the obstruction of navigation by ice in the upper Mississippi. Sugar and molasses, on the contrary, have been in active request at full prices, and our leading staple, after advancing ⅛ to 1¼c. per lb., lost yesterday fully ½c. of the improvement, while the movement in it has been checked by the high prices asked as well as by the moderate supply.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed firm at 13 to 13½c. for Ordinary, 14½ to 15 for Good Ordinary, 15½ to 15¾ for Low Middling, 16 to 16¼ for Middling, and 16½ to 16¾c. for Good Middling, since which, under the influence of the advance reported at Liverpool and New York, and the anticipation that light receipts and the discouraging prospect will cause a further improvement at those points, factors have realized prices showing a further rise of 1 to 1½c. per lb., fully ½c. of which was lost in an unfavorable reaction yesterday. On Saturday the market opened with a very good inquiry, and notwithstanding the enhanced figures claimed by factors, and foreign exchange being unfavorable to the shipper, the demand continued active throughout the day, and 6,100 bales changed hands at an average advance of 1c., Low Middling ruling at 16½ to 16¾c., and Middling at 17 to 17¼. On Monday the movement was much less extended. The inquiry continued fair, but there was only a limited supply offering, and factors repelled buyers by being still more stringent in their pretensions. Hence the sales were confined to 3,300 bales, at irregular prices, part of the business being at previous rates, while all desirable lots were taken at a further advance of ¼c., Low Middling closing at 16¾ to 17c., and Middling at 17¼ to 17½.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,000 bales, taken partly for the North, but mostly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 10,498 bales, against 9,851 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 647 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 303,703 bales, against 416,011 bales the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 134,402 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 73,144 bales to Great Britain, of 47,886 to France, and an increase of 89,109 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	13½ to 14
Good Ordinary	15½ to 15¾
Low Middling	16¼ to 16¾
Middling	16¾ to 17
Strict Middling	— to 17½

MOLASSES.—The demand has continued active, at fully prices, especially for the better descriptions, and the sales, since our last review, embrace 2,600 barrels, all the receipts at 45 to 55c. for Inferior, 55 to 60c. for Common, 67 to 68c. for Fermenting as to quality, 75 to 77c. for Prime, and 78 to 80c. per gallon for Choice.

FLOUR.—The market has continued quiet at previous prices, with only a local demand.

CORN.—The stock having been held at higher prices, little has been done since our last review.

PORK.—The market has been quiet but firm.

LARD.—Keg Lard is scarce and in request. Prime and Choice in tcs. is also scarce and wanted, but the proper descriptions are in abundance and neglected.

BUTTER.—No changes have taken place in this market. There is a fair jobbing demand of choice grades of both Northern and Western, the stocks of which are not large.

A Complete Theological Library, Embracing the Features of all Biblical and Theological Dictionaries extant.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York,

Have just Issued:

THE FIRST VOLUME OF A NEW CYCLOPÆDIA OF BIBLICAL, THEOLOGICAL, AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE. By Rev. JOHN M'CLINTOCK, D. D., and JAMES STRONG, S.T.D. With Maps and numerous Illustrations. To be completed in about Six Volumes, Royal 8vo, of about One Thousand Pages each. Vol. I., comprising the Letters A and B, is now ready. The remaining Volumes are in rapid progress, and will appear at short intervals. Price per volume, Cloth, $5 00; Sheep, $6 00 Half Morocco, $8 00.

"The CYCLOPÆDIA OF BIBLICAL, THEOLOGICAL, AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE is in our judgment one of the most valuable works which have been recently issued. For thorough research, comprehensive range, accurate scholarship, and strict fidelity, it is vastly superior to any work of its class. It is cordially recommended, not only to ministers, but also to all other intelligent Christians."

The Publishers have also received letters highly commending the plan and execution of this work from the following eminent scholars and divines:

Rev. Drs. Leonard Bacon, Theodore D. Woolsey, George P. Fisher, Stephen H. Tyng, H. W. Bellows, Joseph Cummings, T. V. Moore, W. J. R. Taylor, M. B. Anderson, W. H. Campbell, D. P. Kidder, J. P. NEW ILLUSTRATED

OVER 3000 FINE ENGRAVINGS.

10,000 Words and Meanings not in other Dictionaries.

A necessity to every intelligent family, student, teacher and professional man. What Library is complete without the best English Dictionary?

The work is the richest book of information in the world. There is probably more real education in it than can be bought for the same amount of money in any language. Every parsonage should have a copy at the expense of the parish. It would improve many pulpits more than a trip to Europe, and at a much less cost.—N Y Christian Advocate.

Lay it upon your table, by the side of the Bible; it is a better expounder than many which claim to be expounders.—M. Life Boat.

BISHOP SIMPSON says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the best Magazines published for children."

BISHOP STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I believe that its introduction into every household would prove a blessing to young and old.

REV. GEO. D. BOARDMAN says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I am delighted with 'The Children's Hour.' I do not see how a more entertaining, instructive or profitable Magazine could be put in the hands of our children."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"This dear little monthly visitant we believe to be by far the purest, safest, and most attractive magazine for the little ones at home, published in this country."

MR. JOHN B. GOUGH says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I can endorse it thoroughly. It is a most welcome visitor to the family of children at my own home."

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

Is as beautiful as the best typography and the best artists can make it. Two volumes a year, beginning in January and July. The number for January, 1868, will be the most beautiful number of a child's magazine ever published. Terms as above.

Popery is a Cunning Compound of Superficial Truth and Solid Error.

BY PROF. J. B. A. ARDEIS.

THE PRIESTAL CELIBATE.

This unscriptural and unreasonable custom was brought in as indispensable, and was made compulsory to bind the clergy to Rome by hindering them from having national, local, or family ties—by keeping them aloof from the honorable and generous love of family, kindred, home, and country. By the operation of this barbarian law the papal priesthood are scattered throughout the world as a huge, disciplined, wieldy, active army, not of martyrs, but of masters, not of sin-opposers, but of slave-makers. The papal priesthood may not marry that Rome may tyrannize over the nations, and may have fit, able, and willing agents to carry slavery throughout the world.

This, and in addition thereto, Roman avarice, called the abominable practice into existence.—The papal coffers yearned for whatever property individual priests might have acquired. On the plan of celibacy the pope and priesthood are the heirs of every priest. No children, no family connection will dispute their iniquitous claim.

Romanists usually adduce the following four bottomless arguments with which to establish this bottomless doctrine of the priestal celibate:

1. Papal clergymen are too pure, too holy, too angelic, a set of beings to meddle with marriage. Capital! Wonderful angelicality! Doubtless he who first avowed this has been canonized a saint—a shame to the court of Rome! But to be serious: what hypocrisy, what hyper-hypocrisy! Was not marriage instituted by the holy God? St. Paul says: "Marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled." Still more: Peter, the great favorite of popery, was a married man.

2. The Apostle Paul appears, in Cor. 7, to recommend abstaining from marriage. Thus celibacy has apostolic sanction. But, upon reading the chapter carefully, we find that the recommendation was not meant to be perpetual, but temporary—was given in relation to the particular time when the apostle wrote: "This is good for the present distress," (verse 26.) But, further, Paul's words referred equally to the clergy and laity: "I would that all men were even as I."

3. Celibacy gives to the clergymen time for their official duties, keeping them aloof from the care of providing for a family. We reply, if unmarried clergymen gain time in one way they will, beyond question, lose it in another. But even if the loss of time were made clear, celibacy has invariably been productive of so many evils as will more than counterbalance the pretended gain of time.

4. We Romanists simply copied the pattern of the pristine church. Whether, now, the early church did well or ill in beginning this custom, we do well in continuing it when begun. We answer: who instituted the pristine church as our exemplar and pattern Romanists should have seen that this custom was unreasonable and unscriptural. Hence the papal church acted badly by following a bad example. But, mark you, there is a material difference between the celibate of the pristine and that of the corrupt papal church of to-day. In the pristine church the clergy followed celibacy, but did it voluntarily; with the papal clergy, however, it is sternly and unalterably compulsory.

To all this we add: while the church of Rome has taen good care of the celibacy of te clergy, it has left chastity to tak care of itself. Yea, to be unaste, in Roman priests, has been eemed a mere venial offence, a mre peccadillo. Rome speaks tus to its priesthood: "Avoid mariage for the good of popery; dulge in whoredom for the goo of yourselves; have not a we, though God allows a wife; rpel not a harlot, though God forids a harlot." In fact many apal communities have preferd priests that avowedly and regularly kept their concubines. Th prevented the otherwise wholesme seduction and adultery. In Sitzerland it was even at one tie a government law that the riest had to have concubines. Does not this speak a volume againt the priestal celibate?

Again: Nepotism fondness for nephews and niece has always been a remarkable quality in popes, cardinals, and misters or clergymen. They had of course, no sons and daughters but they have been always surrouded by a great number of nephews and nieces, for whom, strangely, hey took good care to provide, ven as parents provide for their offspring. In churches where clrgymen are allowed to marry they have children, like other hen, and have no more than the usual number of nephews and nices. In the church of Rome, howver, clergymen do not marry, hav no children, but have always so many nephews and nieces. How an we account for this zoological henomenon? May we infer that, s the papal priesthood have bid farewell to Cupid and Hymen, nture, fruitful in contriving, has given additional prolification to their brothers and sisters, and additional uncle-love to themselves, that thus the burden of supporting a fair proportion of the young fal circuitously on the shoulders of te reverend and holy men. Aye, y Romanists! let us tell you that the word nepotism originated among your priesthood. The term was not employed before, and is only used among the papal clergy.

The pope and cardinals, while abusing and excommunicating poor Luther for awfully taking a wife, indulged i Rome in unlawful amour and debauchery, lewdly living with concubines and whores, cursing Luher, and cursed by God.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

MR. EDITOR: You may say, for the encouragement of the friends of the church in Milton, that the new year has opened under favorable auspices. So far the prosperity of the church and the welfare of the pastor seem o be prominently manifested. The people seem to realize that if I "minister unto them in spiritual things, it is small matter that they should minister unto me of their carnal things," and so we have sometimes a leg of pork, and sometimes a basket of vegetables, and one sister H. made us feel, the other day, that we were in the country under the "spare-rib and back-bone" dispensation.

SULPHURIC ACID IN LIVING MOLLUSCA. At the last meeting of the Academy of Sciences, M. Dumas communicated a curious note by which M. de Luca determined, in the liquid contained in living mollusca the presence of a thirtieth part, or about three per cent. of pure sulphuric acid; and stated, furthermore, that the same mollusca, plunged in water, disengages a considerable quantity of carbonic acid.

Evidences of Christianity.—No. 3.

ANTIQUITY OF THE SCRIPTURES.

The antiquity of the books which contain the history, the doctrine, and the laws of the Jewish and Christian law-givers is next to be considered, and the evidence is most satisfactory. The importance of this argument is easy to appreciate. If the writings in question were made at or near the time in which the miraculous acts recorded in them were performed, then the evidence of those events having occurred is rendered the stronger, for they were written at the time when many were still living who might have contradicted the narration if false; and the improbability is also greater that, in the very age and place when and where those events are said to have been performed, any writer would have exposed himself to the hazard of prompt, certain, and disgraceful exposure. The evidence deduced from prophecy derives all its force from the fact that the prediction was written before the events took place, which are said to be fulfillments of prophecy, and so long before as to render guessing impossible.

With respect to the Old Testament scriptures, the language in which they are written is a strong proof of their antiquity. The Hebrew, as is historically well known, ceased to be spoken as a living language soon after the Babylonish captivity, and the learned agree that there was no grammar made for the Hebrew till many ages after. The difficulty of a forgery, at any period after the time of that captivity, is therefore apparent.

Of these books, too, there was a Greek translation made by order of Ptolomy, king of Egypt, about two hundred and eighty-seven years before Christ, and laid up in the Alexandrian library.

Josephus gives a catalogue of the sacred books among the Jews, in which he expressly mentions the five books of Moses, thirteen of the prophets, four of hymns and moral precepts; and if, as many critics suppose, Ruth was added to Judges, and the Lamentations to Jeremiah, the number agrees with the Old Testament as it is received at the present day.

The Samaritans, who separated from the Jews many hundreds of years before the birth of Christ, have the books of Moses, in the main agreeing exactly with the Hebrew. The pagan writers already cited, with many others, speak of Moses not only as the leader of the Jews, but as the author of books esteemed sacred by the Jews.

Leslie, in his argument, has shown that a forgery of the books of Moses, at any time after his death, is so improbable as to be unworthy of belief, so difficult that no sane mind would attempt it; beside, no imaginable reason can be assigned for such an attempt.

It is said in these books that Moses wrote them, that many of the most remarkable things recorded in them had taken place before the eyes of the people to whom Moses read these books, and to whom he committed them with the solemn injunction to teach these precepts and narrate these facts to their children. An ark was made, into which a copy of these books were put, and it was commanded that the priests should read and teach these books, and that their king should have a copy, and should diligently read them all the days of his life.

The books were not only the history of the Jews, but their law books as well—as public and important as the Constitution of the United States. Then there were many mounmental institutions, such as the Passover, to commemorate the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage; the feast of Pentecost, to commemorate the giving of the law; the Sabbath day, the yearly, monthly, and daily sacrifices, and the setting apart an entire tribe to the service of the priesthood. All of these monumental institutions were ordained in the books of Moses, and the people commanded to observe them throughout all their generations. Now if a designing person (for what design, however, we cannot imagine) had attempted to forge these books, and to state in them that Moses wrote them, that he gave them into the possession of the men of his own generation, that they had been in their possession ever since, that they had taught these things to their children, that the generation to whom the impostor presented these books as the books of Moses had from their childhood been familiar with them, and that they had always from the time of Moses had these monumental institutions, knew of their origin and design, the impostor would have found himself contradicted by the experience of every individual, and such a stupendous and wholesale fraud would have been universally scouted as the diseased product of an insane mind.

As, then, it is utterly improbable, if not absolutely impossible, that the books of Moses could have been forged and written after the death of Moses, the conclusion is irresistible that they were written by Moses—that is, about fifteen hundred years before the Christian era.

All this reasoning is equally applicable to the New Testament scriptures. The rite of baptism and the Supper of the Lord were instituted by Christ—cannot be ascribed to any other, and cannot be accounted for only as commemorative of his death and visible assumption of discipleship, and public admission into that society (called the church) instituted by Christ.

Now for an impostor, one hundred or five hundred years after Christ, to forge a book, and in this book to tell the people to whom he addressed his book—who, by the way, had never heard of Christ, of the last supper, the baptism, or the church — that they had always known these things, is too improbable to admit of discussion, not to say that no intelligible reason can be assigned for such an attempt.

From the first Christian century until this day no books have been so generally read, translated, and quoted as the books of the New Testament. Indeed, so generally and extensively were they quoted by early Christian writers, that it has been ascertained by careful examination and comparison that if the entire New Testament was lost, if not a copy of it remained on the earth, that its entire contents could by collected, book by book, chapter by chapter, and verse by verse.

Then we have the testimony of the open and avowed enemies to the antiquity of the New Testament scriptures. Celsus, an infidel, wrote against Christianity about one hundred and thirty years after the ascension of Christ. He mentions the principal facts recorded by the Evangelist in the inspired biographies.

Porphyry flourished about two hundred and seventy years after Christ. He was an infidel, and wrote against the gospel. He admits the existence of the New Testament, and quotes from it; Hierocles, about 303 A. D., and Julian, the Emperor, A. D. 361: these all admit the existence of the New Testament, and quote from it.

BRAZILIAN CORRESPONDENCE.

NITHEROY, Prov. of Rio de Janeiro, December 25, 1867.

MR. EDITOR: I have only time to write a short letter to-day, as the steamer's mail closes in a few hours.

With each successive month of my stay in Brazil I am better pleased with the country, and hence am much surprised at the foolish stories about this country published in the papers in the States. I am not surprised at what those people tell, but it does seem strange that such fabrications can find their way into the columns of any respectable journal.

Now I will state a few facts in relation to myself, and I am sure they are not fancies. When I landed in Rio I had one hundred dollars in gold. This was my all, and I knew my family at home had but little to remit in case of need. But in two days after I landed I was looking for a location. It took me a month to find and secure one that would suit. Adhering to the plan adopted before I left home, I at length secured a small farm, convenient to this city and to good society, and now at the end of three months my farm is self-supporting; in other words, pays all expenses every way, and leaves a margin for profits. This is not fancy, but reality.

Again: where I am, at least, I can cultivate two acres easier than I could one in the States. One great reason of this is that the rains fall so gently that the lands are left light and mellow, never packed, or "run together." Another reason is that grass is not so troublesome here as in the cotton States. I have corn that was planted about the 15th of October which is silking, and promises a fine yield, and that corn is clean now, yet it was only plowed once and hoed twice, and not very carefully at that. The seed corn I brought with me, and it is doing quite as well in the way of eating and filling as ever I saw in Mississippi. I have another lot of four acres of corn, planted about the first of November, and it is now hunching for tassel, is about seven feet high, and is very promising. This, too, has been worked just as the other, and is in good condition. The "snap beans" planted between the hills of corn will pay for the culture of the land.

I have a market for every thing suitable for food, for man or horse; hence my farm is so soon self-supporting. Vegetables of every kind grow finely. In my garden I have cabbage of my own planting that is heading well, and it is now mid-summer in this hemisphere.

Again, it costs a mere trifle to keep mules and horses here. I have as yet but one, and that one has plowed all my land, some twenty acres, and then plowed the growing crops on it, and he has not eaten more than three bushels of corn, and is in fine order. The grass used here for feeding is about equal to "sheaf oats" in the States, and it grows all the year, and can be mowed on rich lands four times per annum, with a heavy yield each time.

Again, the favorite grasses grown here are easily killed with a good plow, and leave no seed to be in the way of crops raised on the land.

I am now looking for my family, and when they get here they will find a better house than they ever lived in before, with more of the comforts and conveniences of life than we have had in the last six years, with good society quite accessible to us. In this respect we only lack church privileges, which, with God's blessing, we will have ere long.

I have found no difficulty in buying necessary supplies in Rio on credit, and the same is true, I think, of all sober Americans who settle here. There are several houses in the city where they are very kind and liberal toward us.

Since my last letter the Presbyterian mission in Brazil has sustained a great loss in the death of the Rev. Mr. Simonton, who was its founder, I believe. He has been here about eight years, and was the superintendent of all the missions of his church in this country. He was well qualified for the important trust committed to his care, and lived just long enough to see the good work, begun by himself, beginning to grow rapidly. I think there are now some five missions in Brazil, with four preachers, and some four or five young men, natives of Brazil or Portugal, studying for the ministry. Indeed, the mission is very promising.

"God's ways are not as our ways." He has called home to heavenly rest the faithful laborer in the full vigor of his manhood, leaving behind him wide-spreading fields white with the harvest. When stricken down by disease Mr. S. was at San Paulo, on a visit to the several missionary stations in that province. He died in peaceful hope of eternal rest, and it is pleasant to add that ere he died his attending physician, Dr. McTyeire, a Methodist, I am told, led in prayer by the bed-side of the dying missionary.

Fraternally yours,

J. E. NEWMAN.

WORK OR STARVE.—This is the law and the penalty from which there is no escape. Thousands are trying to evade it; some by making their fellow-men work for them, others by depending on money inherited or accumulated in former years, but without avail. If idle, they starve in the midst of plenty. They may eat to the full, but eating without exercising is against the law of nature, and very soon the stomach refuses to digest the food, the body is not nourished, and the man literally starves, though he may feel no hunger. The hands, the brain, and the heart must work to live. If you dodge the labor of learning lessons you at the same time miss the strength of intellect which mental work brings, and the mind will pine for want of nourishment. Thousands have starved their wits in this way, until they wonder how it is that others carry away all the prizes in life. Many starve their hearts by never exercising them with noble emotions. Selfishness eats into the nature like a canker, leaves the man hungry for affection, but love is the price for love, and he that will not work in this field must accept the penalty. It is an error to think that work was a penalty imposed on man for having violated God's command. Man's nature is such that activity is the law of his being. Every muscle and nerve calls for employment that it may remain in health, and there can scarcely be a more terrible punishment than solitary confinement where the eye, the ear, and the hands must remain idle. A slow, paluful death will surely result. So then, boys and girls, strive to love work and not to shun it. Though you may be as rich as Astor or Stewart in money, yet your own nature will suffer the pangs of poverty without active exercise.—American Agriculturist.

THE DEPTH OF TREES.—There has recently sprung up some controversy as to the proper depth that trees should be transplanted; and, as is usual in controversies of this kind among practical men, there is not the least hope of their ever coming to a common opinion on the question. And this is natural, and perhaps as it should be. Different kinds of trees frequently require different modes of culture, beginning with the planting. For instance, dwarf pears should be planted deep, two or three inches below the union of the quince with the pear, in all soils where a dwarf pear ought to be. A fir or spruce should be planted shallow, and so, as a rule, should standard pear and apple trees, as well as most if not all of the grape family. This exception should, however, be made: in light, porous soils they may be gauged deeper than in clay molds. Thus the heavier the soils the shallower should trees be planted. Such is our experience.

THE HEROISM OF SUFFERING.

Brave souls oft will and dare, yet no'er achieve;
Alcestes-like, perchance they aim too high—
Their arrows miss the stars, yet dazzling leave
Bright trails along the sky.

A lofty aim, in every age and clime,
Nobly pursued, in failure dignifies
A life, and consecrates it as sublime
In God's impartial eyes.

Yet not by deeds alone is greatness shown,
Or are our souls ennobled and made pure;
Life's hardest lesson oft is without groan
To suffer and endure—

Not dare and do—only to stand and wait;
Not reap, but idly list the harvest song;
Not soar like larks, but, silent, through cold grate;
See right oft yield to wrong.

As Regulus the Punic offer spurned,
Despite the ties of wife, and child, and home,
The Senate left, and to his foes returned
To die, than shame great Rome.

What though base foes his limbs in dungeon chain;
Hot Afric's suns his lidless eyes eclipse;
Sharp nails transfix him to cross in pain;
No moan escapes his lips.

Great even in defeat—alive or dead;
(Example fires the millions yet to be;)
Greater in woe than when in pomp he led Rome's fleet to victory!

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE VINE AND THE BRANCHES.

Christ is the true vine, not in opposition to the natural vine, for all material nature is in some sort a type and a prophecy of higher and more spiritual manifestations. Christ is the true vine in opposition to the Jewish church, which was a vine that the Lord had brought out of Egypt and planted on the sunny slopes and in the fertile valleys of Canaan. This vine the Lord hedged about and cultivated by his word, his ordinances, and his providence, but it proved to be a false vine, and brought forth sour grapes, and did not repay the outlay of labor and solicitude bestowed upon it, nor realize the hopes its planting inspired. Christ is the true vine, not the type, but the antitypo, the fulfillment of the type, and surely realizes the hopes he inspired.

Christ declares that his disciples are the "branches." No other illustration of spiritual truth drawn from nature so well expresses the intimate and vital relation existing between Christ and the members of his spiritual body. The figure of the good shepherd caring for and guarding the sheep most beautifully and touchingly expresses the providential care of God over his people. The figure of the "spiritual temple," built up of 'living stones" upon Christ, the chief cornor-stone, conveys most clearly the idea of Christ being the foundation on whom all must rest their hopes of salvation. The figures of the "bread of life," tho "water of life," which Christ declares himself to be, more fully than the "living stones," built up nto an holy temple, express the vital and intimate relation of Christ to his people, because these elements have much to do in sustaining life and increasing its vigor. But the vine is the source, the origin of life to the branches, as much so as the fountain is the source of the stream, or the sun of the countless rays that stream from it. The true vine is the source of salvation, of all spiritual life. He is the God man, and thus lifts up and unites man to God, the "rock higher than us." He is to believers wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, the sum of spiritual good, the fruition of hope. Our spiritual life depends upon our identity with him.

The Father is the husbandman—the vine-dresser—of the vine, as well as of the branches. Christ was an example, and was "made perfect through suffering." He was poor, was persecuted, tempted, and suffered ingratitude and treachery, and drank the cup of sorrow to its last bitter dregs. But we must suppose the pruning refers more to the branches than to the vine. They are less perfect, and need it more. Some bearing no fruit must be removed, and some bearing less than they should must be pruned. This pruning of branches already bearing may seem to wear the guise of severity. It is, however, a needful thing. There may be growth without fruit. Character may be developing without spiritual progress and without usefulness. The needless vine and luxuriant foliage may exhaust sap without producing fruit. Gifts and opportunities may be possessed without wise use, and we may only grow in worldliness; but losses, afflictions, and bereavements tend to cure us of worldliness, and increase spirituality and usefulness.

The fact that fruit-bearing vines are pruned to make them more fruitful would seem to teach that an increase of fruitfulness is the reward of fruitfulness. Bearing fruit is a high honor in God's esteem, and in age, in death, and eternity we shall feel it so too. "Their works do follow them" is one of the bright features of the future bliss of the saved and good. From God's high appreciation of fruitfulness, and our appreciation, it would seem to follow as a legitimate sequence that our heavenly state will be a state of holy and delightful activity. "Rest," it is true, "remains for the people of God"—rest from weariness, from pain and sin, but not a state of idleness, but of blessed employments adapted to our glorified and immortal natures.

The fact that fruit-bearing vines are pruned will explain why many of the holiest men are called to suffer. Job, though a perfect man, fearing God and eschewing evil, suffered that he might be more fully developed. Paul suffered until he learned to walk by faith, and in whatsoever state he was therewith to be content. It is true the righteous man is holy, but he may be holier; he is useful, but he may be more so; he glorifies God, but he may glorify Him more abundantly.

We are to abide in Christ as the source of our fruitfulness. This abiding in Christ began in faith and must be so continued. We must walk by faith. The life we live must be by faith in the Son of God. This divine life must be nourished by daily prayer, searching the Word, and the ordinances of God's house.

They that abide not in Christ, the branch that is only fastened in a formal and material way to Christ, and draws no sap from Him, withers. This is the situation of some. They bear no fruit, yet retain it, it may be, by an outward connection with Him after all real life is gone. The great sin of such is that being in Christ they were capable of bearing fruit. They so lived, or rather died, that they have lost that gracious power. Their sins have separated between them and God. When thus spiritually dead Christ takes them away, and they are buried. The vine as a bearer of fruit is of great value, but as mere wood is of little value, not suited for building, furniture, or implements—really only fit to be burned. Man was made to glorify God and enjoy Him forever. But if he comes short of this illustrious destiny, for what is he fit? Not for heaven, but endless burning.

Are we united to Christ, the true vine, the Lord from heaven? Or are we united to the first Adam, who is of the earth, earthy—a degenerate vine, that only bears sour grapes? What is our state? By our fruits we are known. W.

THE PEA WEVIL.—It is stated that the New Jersey market gardeners prevent the pea wevil from destroying the germ in the early peas which they wintered for seed by sprinkling the heap with spirits of turpentine after winnowing and before storing in bins. One quart of turpentine is sufficient for fifteen or twenty bushels of peas.

SEVEN women in one school district in Machias Mo., have woven 1,253 yards of cloth this season. In the same district one lady, 75 years of age, wove six yards in the forenoon, and went visiting in the afternoon.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY.

All the great characteristic features by which modern civilization is distinguished from the ancient, are owing the doctrines of Christianity. The very "individualism," as it is called, "the sense of personal liberty," which M. Guizot justly regards as one of the most striking peculiarities of modern civilization, and which he ascribes to the barbarians of Germany, is really due to the great doctrines before noticed. It was, says he, wholly unknown to the ancient world. The State was then everything, and the individual nothing. Or if the individual was supposed to possess any value, this arose, not from the intrinsic grandeur of his nature and the glory of his destiny, but from the fact that he had been made a constituent atom of Greece or Rome. He was made for the State, he was owned by the State, and the State claimed the right to do what it pleased with its own. This was so both in theory and in practice. But now both the theory and the practice are reversed. It is still maintained, indeed, that man is made for the State; but in a higher sense, it is now believed that the State is made for man. This revolution was effected, this great change in the civilization of the world was introduced, not by the barbarians of Germany, but by the sublime doctrine of the immortality of the soul. There was nothing peculiar in the nature of those barbarians to account for so great a difference between the two civilizations. The original inhabitants of Greece and Rome were just as fiercely independent, just as ready to assert their individual "personal freedom," or more properly speaking, their self-willed and stubborn ferocity, as were the barbarians of the German forests. Such a nature is unquestionably a better stock on which to engraft a civilized "individualism" than that of any worn out, effete, and servile race of men. But the true secret of the great difference in question is, that "the Sun of Righteousness" shone on the barbarians of Germany, and not on those of early Greece or Rome. By revealing the infinite dignity and worth of the individual man as an immortal being, the doctrine of Christ emancipated him from the despotism of the State, and raised him in some respects far above all interests that knew a period. He could no longer be wholly merged in the State. It was no longer the proudest title to which he could aspire that he was "a citizen of Rome." He was, indeed, a citizen of the universe, bearing the immortal image of its great King, and being an heir to the eternal glories of his empire. It was "the city of God" and not the city of Rome to which his supreme allegiance was due; and he was required to give unto Cæsar only the things that were Cæsar's. It is thus that the doctrine of Christ has shaped and modified all the politics of the Christian world.

The civil lawyers of Rome, one and all, define liberty to be "the power of doing that which is not forbidden by the laws." But suppose the laws are despotic? Will the citizen then be free? That simple question—one not raised by themselves—refutes their celebrated definition of liberty. Liberty, say they, is only the "power of doing that which the laws do not forbid;" just as if there were no higher law than that of Rome, and no greater king than Cæsar. But what was thus a simple truism to the greatest jurists of the ancient world, is a self-evident fallacy to "the very least in the kingdom of heaven." We no longer live, and move, and breathe, and think, and worship God by virtue of rights derived from the State. Nay, these are the prerogatives, the rights divine of man. God himself gave them, and all the powers of earth cannot take them away. And the recognition of these sublime prerogatives we owe, not to the barbarians of Germany, but to Him who came to open the eyes of the blind, and to set every captive free. Never since the world began has there been such another champion of human freedom as the Son of Man, or one so wonderfully cautious and conservative in the form, and at the same time so wonderfully liberal and progressive in the spirit and ultimate effects of his doctrine.

The above doctrines, however, would not of themselves have wrought so great an alleviation in the condition of mankind They could not, if taken by themselves, have removed the great evil under which humanity had groaned for so many ages. The great evil, namely, of conscious guilt, and a consequent sense of exposure to the divine wrath. It is this guilty fear which through all ages had disturbed the history of mankind, and caused the blood of innocent victims to stream from ten thousand altars. All superstitions have had their roots in this fear. From this fear Moloch derived his terrors, and Juggernaut his hideous form. Human victims in countless thousands have been sacrificed to appease this fear, or rather to appease the anger of the gods whom this fear has created. The description of the Roman poet, though intended for religion, presents a striking picture of the superstition around him; the only kind of religion with which he was acquainted. "Indeed mankind," says he, "in wretched bondage held, lay groveling on the ground, galled with the yoke of religion; from the sky this tyrant showed her head, and with grim looks hung over us poor mortals here below." * * * "What the poet's fable of Tantalus in hell, being always in fear of a huge stone hanging over head, is nothing to that fear which men have of a Deity here in this life, which, indeed, was the very thing mythologized in it." * * * "There is no happy or comfortable living while this tyrant is permitted to hold her place over our heads. It was therefore a noble and heroical exploit in Democritus and Epicurus, these two good-natured men, who seeing the world oppressed by the grievous yoke of religion, the fear of a Deity and punishment after death, and taking pity of the sad condition of mankind, did most manfully encounter that affrightful spectre and empusa of a providential Deity, and by clear philosophic reasons chase it away and banish it quite out of the world."

But God saw the oppressed condition of mankind long before it was seen by Democritus or Epicurus; and in coming to their relief he took counsel from neither of "those good-natured men." In his infinite wisdom He provided an ample remedy for all their "griefs and calamities;" not however by shrouding his eternal glories from the view of mortals, but by unfolding the fathomless depths and the boundless extent of those glories to the wonder and admiration of the world. If he had stopped here the remedy would have been incomplete; nay, it would have only aggravated the evil. The revelation of an infinitely holy God, from whom mankind are alienated by their sins, would have deepened and intensified their fears. The immortality of the soul itself without some way opened for its escape and security would have rendered the yoke of its bondage still more galling and oppressive. It would have brought to life not an immortality of life, but an immortality of death. It would have aroused the deep seated and inextinguishable desire of life only to leave it without "the bread of life." Hence the doctrines above mentioned were preparatory to that which constitutes the grand and distinctive peculiarity of the gospel. It is in this grand peculiarity that they find their completion and their power. In so far as the regeneration of the world is concerned, their chief value consists in their power to awaken a still deeper sense of the alienation of the soul from God, and to make it "cry unto him from the depths." It is that sense, it is that cry which has gone up from every land under heaven, which attests that Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world, is "the desire of all nations." And where this sense is once awakened, where this cry of suffering humanity is once heard, there the sublime doctrine of the redemption of the world by the atoning blood of the Son of God will find its way into the heart just as air rushes into a vacuum. Miracles will not be needed to procure it an admission. Miracles alone could keep it out. And there, once received by faith, it cuts all superstition by the roots. It kindles "the perfect love which casts out fear." The soul reconciled to God no longer approaches him in the attitude of a crouching and trembling slave, but in the spirit of a little child, crying, "Abba, Father!" It has no longer any use for those miserable sophistries and delusions by which the heathen world in general, as well as Democritus and Epicurus in particular, reasoned a providential Deity quite out of the world, and banished him from the universe he had created. On the contrary, desiring to retain the knowledge of God, the proofs of his existence and his glory continually brighten in all parts of the universe, and, most of all, in the depths of its own consciousness. Thus, by the doctrine of Christ is the knowledge of God made a permanent thing in the world, by having been rendered a desirable possession to the human mind.

Now here is a doctrine, a power, a cause which lies at the very root of the regeneration of the world. Why then should it have no place in the philosophy of history? Why should all "the ideas" of France be marshaled and set in order as causes of human progress, and this great idea of God himself excluded? We are told, indeed, and we rejoice to believe that there is "a God in history." But is he there as an idle spectator merely, or as a living and working reality? Is He there merely as a sham and a show to impart a sort of lifeless grandeur to the pageant of the world, or is He there fact and in deed, as well as in imagination? If there be in reality as well as in name "a God in history," then why not let us see wh. He does, as well as why and how the divine work is formed? Are Historians deeds the only ones which are not worthy of the attention of the philosopher? If they are grat abstractions merely, and as such only to be bottled up in system of theology, and laid aside, then let the honest truth be told; and we shall certainly not look for historic development from such lifeless things.

Whether the things believed are real or herwise, it is certain that the beliefs of the Christian world are fact, are vital forces in the history of mankind. The belief in the unity of God, the belief in the immortality of the soul, the belief in the doctrine of justification by faith, are as certainly facts as the existence of mind or of matter. It is also certain that these beliefs are among the most powerful of all the causes of human progress, or of the gradual emancipation of the world from the mischiefs and calamities under which it groans and "travails in pain." Hence the history of that progress cannot be truly told, or its causes explained, without an attention to the nature and the influence of these beliefs or convictions of the human mind.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

Bishop Kavanaugh spent last Sabbath in this city, preaching twice at the Roadway Church. His ocean voyage and long sojourn and abundant labors on the Pacific coast have been rather an advantage than otherwise to him. He is hale and vigorous in appearance, giving promise of long years of effective service in the Episcopal work. He has lost none of the elasticity of spirits of former years, but is the same genial and cheerful companion in the social circle that he was before invested with Episcopal honors, and in the pulpit has lost none of the eloquence and power for which he has long been famed.

The Bishop arrived in California in September, and remained in the Pacific States thirteen months, dividing his time between California and Oregon, but pending most of his time in the former. At the preachers' meeting on Monday morning he gave an interesting account of affairs in the Pacific, of which the following is the substance:

CALIFORNIA.

Our church in California during the war had a hard struggle to maintain its existence. Our preachers kept themselves free from political alliances, yet they, and our people, were regarded with disfavor by many because of their connection with the South, ecclesiastically. They were persecuted by partisan political zealots, and many men really in sympathy with us dared not to avow it because of the opposition to us. At the time of Mr. Lincoln's assassination the feeling of animosity to us on the part of a portion of the community was so fierce that it was feared our church in San Francisco would be destroyed, and Gen. McDowell had to be asked for a guard to preserve the property from destruction. Since the war a decidedly better feeling prevails in reference to us. Friends who were before kept in terror are now outspoken in our favor, and since the political revolution that has swept over that State, the feeling in our favor has increased. The people are now commending our preachers for abstaining from an intermeddling with politics and pursuing the course they so wisely did in the past, while those preachers and churches that were famed for political intermeddling are less favorably regarded than in former years. Since the late conference many revivals have occured in our churches. The Spectator, our church paper there, brings cheering accounts thereof, and the indications are now most hopeful for the future. We have a college in California that is proving a great blessing to the church, and will make its impression for good.

OREGON.

In Oregon the prospects for our church are even more encouraging than in California. The population of Oregon is chiefly from Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin. The political feeling has never been so rabid there as in California; the public mind sympathizes more with us, and our prospects are good. We have only a few preachers in Oregon—only fifteen in the Conference—but they are full of fire and are working very successfully. If we can get that country well supplied with preachers of the right kind we will have great success. The population is of a good character. The people are better supplied with property than is usual in a new country. A living is easily made; it is a fine country for poor men; farms are cheap and the soil is good. They raise mostly small grain, and some corn. He was astonished to find so much wealth in our church for a new conference and country. Nearly every man is in comfortable circumstances. All the means of living are abundant, but money is very scarce. Fruit grows rapidly there. A man may plant an orchard and eat fruit from the trees the second year. Peaches do better in California than in Oregon. The whole country is a vast strawberry bed; and when a forest is removed, they flourish wonderfully. Other berries are abundant. The "thimble berry," somewhat resembling a strawberry, is the finest fruit of the berry kind he ever ate; it almost melts in the mouth, and has the most delicious flavor. It grows on a bush about two or three feet high.

Some men who reached Oregon with only a few dollars now have thousands of acres of land, and farms stocked with cattle, horses, etc. The horses are very fine, large, finely formed and powerful, equally valuable for riding, working and driving. The latitude is that of Wisconsin and Michigan, but on account of its contiguity to the Pacific Ocean, and being swept by winds from the South, the climate is very mild, the winters are warm; ice for putting up is not often made. In September the grass springs afresh and grows all winter; stock graze the winter through and are never fed. The greatest objection to winter is the long continued drizzling rains. In summer the climate is most delightful; it is done up to your taste. It is just warm enough to foster vegetation and advance it to its maturity, and be very pleasant by day and night to the people.

The country is partly timbered and partly prairie. The fir tree abounds there, tall and heavy. One is inspired with a feeling of solemnity in passing through one of the great forests of fir. One man said he always "felt like taking off his hat" to the grand old trees when he entered a forest assembly of them. There are many grand and commanding scenes. From one elevation he looked upon seven snow capped mountain peaks, in summer. One of them—Mount Hood—is reputed to be 1,700 feet higher than any other mountain in the United States. The water in Oregon, whether in wells, springs, creeks or rivers, is the finest in the world. It is as clear as the air and as cold as can be desired. The surface of the country is mountain and valley, with some undulations contiguous to the mountains. One annoyance to farmers is the fern, which has a long root and is difficult to be destroyed when well set. The streams abound with the finest of fish; the forests and prairies with wild game, as deer, and fowls, and birds of different kinds.

In answer to a question about educational interests, he said: We have a college in Oregon in prosperous condition. He referred in complimentary terms to Rev. O. Fisher, a well known pioneer on the Pacific coast, whom he represented as a grand old man, who, in the estimation of the people, can rival Saint Paul as a preacher. He is grand in feeling, fire, sense and everything else that make a preacher, and is a power among the people. He went up from California, and bought and started a college himself—one of rather modest pretensions, but it has yielded to one of larger proportions, owned by the Conference, for the education of boys and girls, which will prove a great blessing to the church.

The camp meetings in Oregon and California were grand institutions. He had attended them with great pleasure to himself, and they were a blessing to the church.

THERE is great good sense in the following from Rev. T. L. Cuyler:

A poor juiceless sermon ought never to be preached the first time; but a nutritious, savory discourse may be made all the better on a second delivery. Dr. Addison Alexander preached his glorious sermon on the "Faithful Saying" until he wore out the manuscript; and Dr. Griffin repeated his elaborate discourse on the "Worth of the Soul" ninety times! He never wearied of it—nor did his audience either. His congregations changed constantly, and memories are leaky; a first-rate, practical sermon ought to be repeated (with extempore improvements) about once in five years. Few sermons, and richer, should be a settled pastor's aim. Whitefield attained great finish and power by giving the same discourse over again through all his missionary tours.

KEEP YOUR SHEEP FROM HARM.—Bells will prevent the depredations of dogs among your sheep. A dog that knows enough to kill sheep, also knows enough to be sly and still about it. The great noise caused by a number of bells makes him fear for safety, and he leaves without doing damage. The bells also would bring the friends of the sheep to their rescue. A dozen bells in a flock of 100 would be ample. In a flock of 12 sheep half of them should wear bells.

From the Leisure Hour.

WIDOW No. 2,

'Let me see; down Woburn Place. Yes; that is it. Turn to the left; here we are.' And he was about to knock at another door when it opened, and a lady attired for walking appeared at it, and exclaimed, gayly—

'Mr. Dovedale! who would have thought of seeing you on such a day? I wonder Sarah allowed you to come through this fog.'

Mr. Dovedale laughed, and said he didn't let a trifle turn him from his purpose; 'but,' he added, 'you are going out. I won't detain you. I have more calls to make. I will come to you another day.' Mrs. Innes wouldn't hear of it; she was quite glad he had nipped in the bud her intention of braving the fog; and, drawing him in with friendly force by the hand he had offered in farewell, she closed the door, and led the way to a snug and comfortable room, where they were soon seated by a good fire.

'Now I am very much obliged to you for this visit,' said the lady, throwing off her cloak; 'it has kept me from venturing out, and saved me, perhaps, from rheumatism and toothache; for I am sure the wind is in the east.'

Mr. Dovedale was glad he had been so serviceable, and proceeded to make inquiries after the family of his hostess.

'You have not heard of Charles's appointment, perhaps?' she said, among other things. 'No, he had not. A capital appointment—entirely through Sir Rodney. He kept his word at last, I am glad to say.'

'He has been a great friend to you,' remarked Mr. Dovedale.

'Yes, yes, he has,' said Mrs. Innes, with hesitation; 'but not more than we had a right to expect, you know. He is related to us; poor Captain Innes was his second cousin.'

'Second cousins have sometimes short memories on the score of relationship—when the claim of kin is not convenient, I mean,' replied Mr. Dovedale, smiling.

'Very true; and I have had to keep Sir Rodney up to the mark, I assure you, or we should not have got this; between you and me, as it is, he might have done better for us. It would have been a hundred a year more in Charles's way if he had got what we first applied for—and he ought to have got it for him; however, we must be content, and £400 a year will do for the present.'

'Will do,' thought Mr. Dovedale; but he didn't remark further on it.

'How is Cecilia?' he inquired.

'Very well. She was here last week. We see her continually,' said Mrs. Innes.

'Your sister had you are equally advantaged by her kind arrangement,' remarked Mr. Dovedale.

Mrs. Innes laughed, and shook her head with that peculiar look which says, 'You think so? I know what I know.' Finding her companion silent, she put the expression into words, saying, 'My sister-in-law never did anything without a full recompense, Mr. Dovedale—this is between you and me. She is my husband's sister, and passes in the world for 'very kind,' and all that, but I know her, and so do you, don't you, now?'

This was asked with a frank sort of gayety that made her companion smile. He answered that he had always thought Mrs. Hodson a very generous-hearted woman.

'Yes, that is her public character; but now just consider, what generosity is there in giving what she can't keep? and giving it to her own brother's child?'

Mr. Dovedale suggested that she had other relatives, and might have chosen among them.

'Yes, but think—my claim as a widow, and the others are all well off.'

Mr. Dovedale stared at this remark.

'O, I know what you mean—so am I well off. Well, of course, poor Captain Innes took care of me, and I am not in want of anything; yet for all that there are many ways in which my sister Hodson might show her generosity to me. It is true she has promised to leave all to Cecilia when she dies, and cannot keep it any longer herself; but, in return for that, what does she do? Why, takes her away from me continually; expects, in fact, to have the best half of her company.'

'But you said she was here continually,' remarked Mr. Dovedale.

'Well—yes, certainly she comes if I send for her, and frequently without; but that is not a pleasant state of things for a mother to have to ask for her child. If Mrs. Hodson did the right thing, she would—; but it's of no use complaining. I speak openly to you as an old friend; it is a bitter pill, but, being gilded, I submit to swallow it with a good grace.'

As Mrs. Innes closed her remark a look of self-complacency overspread her face, and she challenged Mr. Dovedale's applause with her eyes, but he didn't quite see his way to admiration, so he inired after little Fred, and hoped 'twas getting on at the preparatormilitary school.

'I took him away—I was obged,' said Mrs. Innes.

Mr. Dovedale looked surpred.

'I believe I was wrong, the discipline was so severe he didn't bear it, poor little fellow, and being the youngest, he was alwe my pet. I found it so very hard part with him, and his health wou have suffered if he had remaid. I complained, and applied for laxation of rules for him throughColonel Brotherton, who was so intimate, you know, with Captain Ins, but I got no redress. I fancy Colonel wasn't hearty about it, so I took him away; it is a great piety to me, and I don't know what shall do with him, but—'

A loud noise interrupted her, and a boy of about thirteen fused into the room, not knowing at any but his mother was there.

'Fred! Mr. Dovedale—peak to Mr. Dovedale,' said Mrs. Ines, feeling awkwardly sensible hat her visitor would not see nudelicacy in Fred's appearance.

The boy gave a hasty recognition of Mr. Dovedale, and en made some urgent applicati to his mother in a whisper.

'No, really, Fred;' and Indeed I can't allow it;' and final, 'Well, remember this is the last!' were uttered by Mrs. Innes fm time to time as he still more ar more urgently pleaded, and at e close she took out her purse an put some money in his hand, ssing his cheek, and conjuring him not to hurt himself.

Her eyes followed hi out of the room, and she said wit a mother's fondness, 'He grows so ast, and he is flushed to-day; don you think he gets like his poor faer?'

Mr. Dovedale didn't see the likeness, but thought it as probably his own fault, especlly as she said, 'Everybody see it. He is going to have firework in the court, with some of his old shool-fellows. I assure you he mahs great demands on my purse. tell him I cannot stand it; but boys will be boys.'

'He looks as if he uld stand a little discipline,' rmarked Mr. Dovedale, gently.

'Yes, his health is greatly improved since he left hat school. I must speak to Sir Rodney about him,' said Mrs. Innes with a sigh.

'Will he do anyting for you?' asked Mr. Dovedale.

'Will he? He cannot help it; something must be done, and he can do it best.'

Mr. Dovedale thought it was a happy thing to be ble to wind up necessities in so satisfactory a style, and having n more time to spend, aross to tak his leave. 'I am on my way t see a person whom you once knw, I think,' he said; and added, 'oor Mrs. Mayblossom—don't you remember her husband, Captain Myblossom? He was disabled early n his career in India, and died a last from the effects of a sabre wund, a lingering illness of many years, closed by death in very painful circumstances. I didn't hear till ths morning that his widow is in most distressing poverty, with six children, and in very delicate healt.'

'I remember the name,' said Mrs. Innes, coldly, 'but he had his half-pay, I suppose?'

'Yes, of course.

'And she had a pension?'

'Yes, but that, with six children!' said Mr. Dovedale

'Ah, indeed! Im thankful I have but three,' said Mrs. Innes, with satisfaction.

'And bad health,' continued her companion.

'Dreadful, that. I don't know what illness is; never suffered from anything but rheumatism and toothache, and I manage to keep out of them pretty well'

'I thought of raising a little subscription for her quite privately. I mentioned her name to you because you knew her,' said Mr. Dovedale.

'Years ago,' said Mrs. Innes, hastily; 'we were never very intimate; she was rather of a melancholy turn, and I was always the reverse, you know.'

Mr. Dovedale stood silent for a moment to give Mrs. Innes time to tender her offering. Perhaps her son's fireworks had cost too much; she did not produce her purse, but said, 'You are going to see her, you say?'

'Yes,' said Mr. Dovedale.

'Well, perhaps you will let me know if there is anything I can do. Of course, being a widow myself, I am obliged to think of my own wants and my family; still, if—'

'Thank you, thank you,' said Mr. Dovedale, as hastily as she had before replied to him; 'perhaps I may find things better than I expect.'

'Very likely; these things get so exaggerated, and, really, it isn't everybody that takes matters so quietly as I do.'

'Now isn't it monstrous?' thought Mr. Dovedale, as he wended his way to the last of the three widows; 'she that has all things abounding, and every possible help—that she should talk of taking matters quietly; she is worse than Mrs. Wickwork, and that is saying a good deal.'

From Chambers's Journal.

THE LOCUST.

Toward the beginning of the present century a prodigious body of locusts was precipitated across the Black Sea upon the steppe lying east of Odessa, where it committed the most indescribable devastation. To destroy the invaders columns of serfs were marched down from the interior, but on arriving at the scene of action were almost paralyzed by the phenomenon they witnessed. For miles the whole surface of the plain, converted into a black color, seemed to be alive and in motion, for the scaly bodies of the locusts, closely pressed and locked together, presented the appearance of a huge dusky cuirass reflecting with a strange glitter the rays of the sun. The mass being in motion, advanced inland, slowly but steadily, murmuring like the surges of the ocean, putting the sheep, the cattle, the horses, and the inhabitants on all sides to flight. A stench not to be expressed by words was emitted from the host as it crawled forward, the living devouring the dead for lack of other provender. Putting their mattocks, spades, pickaxes, and other implements into immediate requisition, the serfs speedily excavated a trench several miles in length across the track of the locusts; but ere they had finished the enemy was upon them, and soon demonstrated the futility of their device. In the course of a few minutes from their reaching the brink of the excavation the foremost ranks had been pushed into it by those that followed, and filled it up from edge to edge, so that the multitude continued its march apparently without interruption; then everything combustible was collected, and set on fire in front of the column, with the same result. The whole Black Sea seemed to be transformed into locusts, which, from its low shores, came up in countless myriads, setting at defiance all the arts and industry of man. Several columns of the invaders filed off toward the east, and alighted amid the vineyards of the Crimea, which they soon changed into a waste of apparently dry and sapless twigs. Russia appeared to be on the eve of a calamity like that which fell upon it about the middle of the seventeenth century, when the destruction of the harvests occasioned a famine, which was followed by a plague, so that the population of whole provinces was thinned almost to extermination. In the present instance the elements came to the deliverance of man. Before a strong west wind, masses of black clouds came pouring up from the Bosphorus, which covered the atmosphere, and ultimately descended in floods of rain. At the touch of descending Joyo the locusts were paralyzed, and as the celestial moisture continued to drench them in pitiless fashion, they gave up the ghost, and bequeathed their filthy corpses to the husbandman for manure; not, however, without sundry fevers and dysenteries.

It is a notable fact, that Egypt, though it lies in the very heart of locust-breeding countries, is seldom visited by the pest, the reason probably being the extreme moisture of the air, saturated incessantly by exhalations from the Nile. People talk at present of locusts four inches in length, though we regard the estimate as greatly exaggerated; but if the vermin were naturalized in Egypt, it surpasses conjecture to imagine to what dimensions they would attain in its genial and prolific soil. The scarabei about Esne and Thebes are undoubtedly sometimes found between three inches and a half and four inches in length, and almost as broad as the palm of a lady's hand; the grasshoppers, too, are colossal, and occasionally chirp with startling vehemence.

When the locust does arrive he evinces by various tokens that he is an intruder and a foreigner. Instead of alighting on the rich plains of Memphis, he comes at night on the wings of the Khamsyn, or wind of fifty days, from the Sahara, and often strikes against the muezzin, as from his lofty minaret he calls in darkness the faithful to prayer. Then the vermin descend on the roofs of houses where there is nothing to eat, but where they themselves are soon caught, cooked, and eaten. Still, it is with a sensation by no means pleasing that the traveler's foot strikes against a cluster of locusts in the sand, for he immediately suspects they may be only pioneers or avant-couriers. Advancing westward along the old bed of the Atlantic—for the Sahara is nothing else—you behold colonies of locusts, mounting as soon as their wings enable them into the atmosphere, and directing their flight toward the prodigious chain of Mount Atlas, which they never attempt to traverse on the wing. As they near it, on the contrary, they pay it reverence, and descend to the ground, looking about for some color pass through which they may make their way through the Mediterranean provinces, and from thence, like their countrymen, the Moors, pass over into Andalusia and Granada.

It may certainly be affirmed that the locust is a product of barbarism which disappears as civilization increases. Niebuhr, father to the historian, whose Travels might still be read with no little profit and pleasure, maintains that the visitations of locusts could easily be prevented by a well-organized police. An illustration of the correctness of his theory was, in 1613, supplied in the south of France, when the locusts, for the last time, we believe, invaded that beautiful country. They first made their appearance in the ancient kingdom of Arles, whence they diffused themselves on all sides, attacking and devouring, as is their wont. But they reckoned without their hosts. Instead of having to do with a horde of lazy orientals, they encountered active and sturdy peasants, who attacked, trampled, and pounded them to powder whenever they could assemble in sufficient numbers. Still, the females succeeded in depositing their eggs in the soil, which, if left unmolested, would next season have produced swarms which the arbitrary and fanciful calculators of the time supposed would have amounted to five hundred and sixty thousand millions—that is, quite enough to have stripped the verdure from all France. But the subjects of Louis XIII. were not inclined to see the experiment tried. They diffused themselves over the soil, by the direction of the municipal councils of Arles, Beaucaire, and Tarascon, and digging out the tubes and combs in which the eggs had been deposited, either crushed them to pieces or threw them into the Rhone. Similar exertions would gradually diminish, and in the end utterly destroy the locusts in Mesopotamia, the Nejed, and Syria. Of course the great agent in this destruction should be water, which is everywhere procurable, even in the desert, by sinking artesian wells. At present nothing is done throughout the East by way of prevention.

Considering the immense importance of the subject, it is not a little surprising that in this age of science and research no traveler should have made it his especial business to discover the homes of the locust, though to commerce and civilization such a discovery must be regarded as of infinitely greater moment than that of the source of the Nile. It would therefore, in our opinion, be well worthy the enlightened policy of European governments to organize, equip, and send forth an expedition to examine those regions from which the locust swarms may be supposed to proceed. Some of their nests we ourselves have pointed out, but there are unquestionably many others lying somewhere in the heart of the wilderness, which have never been contemplated by human eye. Far away, secluded from scientific observation, the infinite multitude of locust-parents deposit their eggs in the sand, or in the clefts and fissures of fertile land, where they are hatched by the sun. No less mystery surrounds them than surrounds the sources of the most renowned of rivers. To dispel this would be a great enterprise, and the work of the traveler or travelers who should accomplish it would possess, for a scientific age, unparalleled interest.

TRIAL OF REV. S. H. TYNG, Jr.

The Protestant Episcopal ecclesiastical court appointed by Bishop Potter to investigate the charges presented by Drs. Stubbs and Boggs, Protestant Episcopal rectors in New Brunswick, New Jersey, against Rev. S. H. Tyng, Jr., for preaching without their permission in a Methodist church located within the alleged territorial limits of their parishes, met in the chapel of St. Peter's Church, New York, on Friday, the 17th ult. The court is composed of the following clergymen, all selected by Bishop Potter, of the New York diocese: Rev. Dr. Beech, St. Peter's Church, New York; Rev. Dr. Tuttle, St. Luke's Church, New York; Rev. Dr. Hoffman, Grace Church, Brooklyn; Rev. Samuel Hollingsworth, St. Peter's Church, Portchester, New York; and Rev. William H. Moore, St. George's Church, Hempstead, L. I.

Rev. Mr. Tyng was present with his counsel, Judge Fullerton, of New York, Cortland Parker, Esq., of Newark, and Rev. Dr. S. H. Tyng, Sr. Dr. Walton and Mr. Edward Logan appeared on behalf of the prosecutors.

After spending much time in awaiting the presence of all the members of the court the case was called, and the clerk read the charge and specifications, with the formal signatures appended, as follows:

To the Right Reverend the Bishop of New York: The undersigned, a committee appointed by the Standing Committee of the diocese of New York as the ecclesiastical authority of said diocese, under the provisions of canon 17 of said diocese, to examine the case of the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., a presbyter canonically resident in said diocese, upon a certain notice given to the said Standing Committee by the Right Reverend the Bishop of New Jersey, having made such examination, there being, in their opinion, sufficient grounds for such presentment, do hereby present the said Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., to you for trial upon the following charges and specifications:

Charge.—Violation of p. 3 of canon 2 of title 1 of the digest of the canons for the government of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, passed and adopted in general convention in Richmond, Va., October, 1859, by which section of the said canons it is provided that "no minister belonging to this church shall officiate either by preaching, reading prayers, or otherwise in the parish or within the parochial cure of another clergyman, unless he have received express permission for that purpose from the minister of the parish or cure, or, in his absence, from the church wardens and vestrymen or trustees of the congregation, or a majority of them."

Specification 1.—In this: that the said the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., did, on the morning of Sunday, the 14th day of July, 1867, within the corporate bounds of the city of New Brunswick, in the diocese of New Jersey, which city then constituted the pastoral care of the Rev. Alfred Stubbs, D. D., and the Rev. Ed. B. Boggs, D. D., ministers of the Protestant Episcopal Church, duly settled and in charge of congregations in said city, officiate by preaching and by reading prayers within the said parochial cure of the said Alfred Stubbs, D. D., and of the said Ed. B. Boggs, D. D., without their permission or the permission of either of them, or of the church wardens and vestrymen or trustees of either of their congregations, or a majority of such wardens and vestrymen or trustees.

Specification 2.—In this: that the said Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., did, on the evening of the day aforesaid, within the corporate bounds of the city aforesaid, officiate by preaching and by reading prayers within the said parochial cure of the said Alfred Stubbs and Ed. B. Boggs, without their permission or the permission of either of them, or of the church wardens and vestrymen or trustees of either of their congregations, or the majority of such church wardens and vestrymen or trustees.

Dated at the city of New York the 7th day of October, A. D. 1867.

WILLIAM WALTON, D. D.
SAM'L M. HASKINS, D. D.
R. S. HOWLAND, D. D.
WILLIAM E. CURTIS.
R. W. HARRISON.

At the request of the accused the court decided that the trial should be open to the public. One of the reporters present furnished the following record of the additional proceedings:

The president now asked the accused what his plea to the presentment was.

Mr. Tyng stated that he was instructed by his counsel that no plea was necessary.

The President—Who are your counsel?

Mr. Tyng—Judge Fullerton, Mr. Parker, and Rev. Dr. Tyng.

The President—You should certainly make some plea to the presentment.

Mr. Tyng—I am instructed that the canon requires no plea.

Rev. Dr. Walton addressed the court, insisting that a plea of guilty or not guilty should be made.

The president said he supposed it would be sufficient to understand that the respondent denied the charges.

Mr. Parker—Not altogether.

Rev. Mr. Moore, the clerk, asked if he should enter on the minutes that the accused is understood as denying the charge.

Judge Fullerton—Not at all. No denial has been made.

The President—In the absence of any plea it will have to be so regarded.

Rev. Dr. Walton moved an adjournment until Thursday.

Counsel for the accused expressed their inability to be present at the time stated, and asked an adjournment until February 10th, which was finally agreed upon.

Pending the discussion upon adjournment Rev. Dr. Howland made an urgent appeal to the accused to admit the facts in the case and obviate the necessity of bringing before the court a large number of witnesses. He believed the accused had acted with a sense of duty, and a determination to test the legality of the canon alleged to have been violated. He wished to avoid lengthy litigation and the arousing of a bitter feeling, which a protracted trial was sure to bring about.

This appeal met with no other response except eliciting from Judge Fullerton a promise that the trial should be as brief as possible.

A Great Work.—Those of our young readers who have visited New York will remember the water called the "East River," which separates the city of Brooklyn from the former place. Ferry boats at ten different points convey passengers, teams, etc., back and forth. As a very large number who live in Brooklyn have their places of business in New York, there is an immense tide of travel on these boats. For several hours, morning and evening, a densely packed crowd is usually found on almost every boat. This is especially the case when from any cause a boat is detained from its regular trip. During fogs on the river, or while navigation was obstructed by ice, we have seen thousands of persons and long lines of vehicles waiting their turn, and when a boat arrived a fearful rush has been made to get places. The sinking of a boat at such a time would be a terrible catastrophe, as hundreds of lives must be lost. The citizens of Brooklyn, finding matters growing worse every year, last winter determined to build a bridge to connect the two cities, and the work has already been commenced. It is to be made of wire. Huge cables of many strands will be stretched from shore to shore, and fastened at either end to massive towers of stone work. The towers are to be high enough to raise the bridge one hundred and thirty feet above the water, so that the largest ships can sail under it. In order that teams and passengers may reach so high a point to cross on the bridge, it will be necessary to commence the roadway hundreds of feet back from the river on each side. It is expected that the City Hall Park will be the point of beginning on the New York side, and a place about equally distant from the stream on the Brooklyn side. It is intended to make the bridge wide enough for railroad tracks as well as other vehicles, so that passengers will be enabled to pass by the horse cars from point to point, in almost any part of the two cities. The bridge will require some three years for completion, and its entire estimated cost is about $5,000,000.—American Agriculturist.

The Cry of Despair.—Years ago a man was benighted in one of the mining regions of England. He lost his way, the darkness was dense, and dangers were thick. The next step might precipitate him down some awful shaft, some gloomy pit, and dash him, bruised and shapeless, upon its floor. He knew his peril, and he stopped, stood still, and began to cry, 'Lost! lost! LOST!'

He ceased. It was a moment of suspense and agony; but a cottager heard the sound, and, grasping a lantern, hurried forth to answer to the voice. Guided by the mournful cry, 'Lost! lost! lost!' he hastens over the gloomy moor. The lost man sees in the distance the glimmering of his light; it comes nearer and nearer, until, as its rays flash through the surrounding mist, he finds that he stands upon the very verge of death; another step would have carried him down the shaft, a crushed and mangled corpse! One step, one more effort to save himself, and he would have been lost beyond hope; another effort even to find his way would have proved his ruin.

Wandering soul, stop where you are! Cease from vain strivings and restless toils. Believe in God and call upon his name. Cry as did the benighted man, 'Lost, lost.' Say as did the publican, 'God be merciful to me a sinner!' Jesus will hear your cry, for he came to seek and to save that which was lost, and he will save you. Stop where you are. You have wandered far enough; another step may be too far. Now there is help for you. 'Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.'

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

THE FAIR FOR GRETNA.

Two of the evenings were drizzly, and interfered seriously with its success. The ladies, however, realized something over $1000 net. For this handsome yield they are indebted to the many friends who gave provisions, and to those who ventured, despite the boisterous times and weather, to place themselves within the reach of its exhilarating yet depleting influence. The steam boats Belle Lee, Wild Wagoner, H. W. Allen, Olive Branch, and the City Hotel vied with each other in the artistic beauty and richness of the cakes which each presented. We did not know that eggs and sugar could be wrought into such elaborate architectural shapes. The city press was also very generous and complimentary—the Picayune, the Times, and the Crescent especially. To all these several friends the Southern Methodist Ladies' Fair Association have returned a formal vote of thanks, as also to Mr. Randle for the aid of his fine Magic Lantern, and to Mr. P. P. Werlein for his services in conducting the Concert.

The whole affair went off in a way that gave great pleasure to many, and offense to none. It made many of our Southern Methodists in this city acquainted with each other for the first time.

Still with those who are opposed to such financiering we have no difference. Possibly they are right. They prefer the more direct method of giving. So do we. We hope that such friends will do as one has already done, quickly send to the Presiding Elder, or one of the preachers in charge, a contribution according to ability and cheerfulness—for "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver"—to help raise the balance needed to save the church from going into other hands, under the hammer. We still need $700 to pay up the mortgage note. That which is "done quickly" will, in this matter, be "twice done."

THEATER-GOING METHODISTS.

The office of a minister of Christ is to walk about the church as Ithuriel went the rounds of Eden to protect the innocent pair, to defend or to warn them against any evil which might appear, or to detect its disguises, and by a touch of his spear force it to assume its own shape. To clear up the truth by eliminating error, and to strip from the Tempter his radiant robes of interwoven light and darkness is the hold work and the arduous employment which heaven has assigned to the divinely-appointed watchman of Zion. He is not expected himself to "chase a thousand" with his own right arm, so much as he is expected to give notice of the approaching enemy: "But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned, if the sword come and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand." This warning is a large part of available defence. "If the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come" he would "not have suffered his house to be broken open." To be wise enough to perceive evil, and to be bold enough to denounce it, are the qualities expected in every minister of the gospel. There is a species of gentle chiding against barefaced sin and unblushing vice, which, like the tones of Ell, only adds zest to the license of the sinner, and which, if kept up, must end in the damnation of both pastor and people. But this is not the alarm of the trumpet of the gospel minister. He winds no feeble or uncertain note. His words, like the clarion of Sinai, enter like steel-pointed missiles into the consciences of the guilty multitude. Believing that the Discipline of the church binds that which heaven will not unloose, or loosens that which heaven will not bind, he speaks by authority, "not as the scribes." He sympathizes with the tempted, and seeks to "convert" the sinner from the error of his ways, that he may "save a soul from death," but he will not become a partaker of other men's sins in an attempt to save them.

Satan, in his malignant detraction of Job, affirmed that his piety consisted mainly in the hedge that God had thrown round about him. It is certain that the chief wish of the Enemy is to break down the defense which the church throws around every Christian, to dissipate those barriers which were placed not only to keep the saints in, but to keep the world out. A field without a fence is the tramping ground of every stray beast; it yields no harvest but that of thorns. There is no surer sign of decay than the inability of a church to defend itself against the patronage of the world, the flesh, and the devil, or the domiciliation of owls and satyrs. To have the lines which separate the kingdom of heaven from the realm of sin so faint that a man can pass and repass without knowing they are there, is to realize Satan's beau ideal of what should be the conditions of man's probation. Not so with our Heavenly Father, or with the Son of God. He has provided a fold and shelter, a munition and defense into which he gathers his people against every wolf, whether open or in disguise; He warns them that outside of this strong shelter they cannot hope to be saved; that the tower of safety is the church which he has "bought with his own blood." The union of godly men in an association which God has himself organized, and which is honored with the person of the Son as its "head," constitutes the strength of Christ's kingdom on earth. The undefiled purity, the single devotion, the heroic self-denial, the unworldly and unselfish aims of those who "name his name," are the evidences of its power, no less than their profession of his faith and their experience of his love.

We remember the time when a Methodist would no more think of going to the theater than he would of putting his head in the fire; and if he had gone, would be pulled out as a man would pull a garment from the flames. The approaches to the damned are not all hidden. One sees in the brothel, in the gambling saloon, in the cock-pit, in the masque hall, in the gin palace, and in the theater the ante-chambers of hell—if there be any on earth. "The dead are there." In the gallery, in the boxes, in the pit, the "congregation of the dead" sits. There the virtuous are jostled by and dwell in plain sight of the most vicious of human kind, drinking in sounds which minister to their passions and inflame their imaginations. There the world congregates in force, it claims the domain as its own, and looks with undisguised jealousy and contempt upon the pious (!) intruder. There parents with unnatural cruelty sacrifice their offspring; offer up the innocence of childhood at the shrine of impiety; expose boys and girls to an atmosphere filled with low sentiments, and place them by the hour under the tutelage of Olympic performers and dancers, who easily pass from the boards to the bagnio.

During the past summer one of these poor creatures committed suicide. On the night previous she entertained a large audience, who applauded the sensual, bewildering, whirling motions of the danseuse. Little could they imagine the pent-up agony of that frail, youthful bosom. The funeral was at a house of ill-fame, attended by the unfortunate creatures; her companions, male and female. It told the whole story of theater life: its glare, its artifice, its excess, its "facilis descensus averni."

Who that prays each day "lead us not into temptation," dare venture in these walks of Satan? What pious youth can expose himself in those places without spotting his soul? Who that seeks to draw nigh to God in holy communion can find a real pleasure in these haunts of impiety?

We cannot sufficiently characterize the folly and sin of indorsing this Sabbath-desecrating, all-engulfing, comprehensive evil. Many do this by going only to see "tragedies, dramas, and great actors." The indorsement is complete, and the descent easy. A member of the church that so far forgets the solemn vow he has openly made, to "renounce the devil and all his works, the carnal desires of the flesh, the vain pomp and glory of the world," "so that thou wilt not follow or be led by them," as to attend the theater, if he cannot be cured by the warning and the counsel of his pastor, should be excluded from the church, in order to save it from the scandal which his inconsistent and irregular life puts upon her.

The only sufficient warning against going to the theater that a pastor can give is to turn out of the church its theater-going members.

SOUTHERN REVIEW.

The January number of this quarterly offers a rich treat to the reader: Draper's History of the War—Architecture of the Animal Kingdom—German Romance—J. J. Rousseau—The Schoolmaster—The Grain of Wheat—School Histories of the United States—The Emperor Julian—Quackery in American Literature—Book Notices. We are well satisfied that this Review is named "Southern." Many things have claimed special favor from the South by affecting to be of the South, but from which the South has derived neither honor nor advantage. But this publication reflects honor upon Southern genius and scholarship. Every professional man should subscribe to it that he may have at hand, for daily reading, the best thoughts presented in the strongest and purest English. In the last several numbers of the ADVOCATE we gave extracts from an article in a former number of this Review, under the captions "The Sun of Righteousness," "Progress," "The Philosophy of History." They are fine samples of the power and polish of the pens which contribute to its pages. We shall hereafter, from time to time, take the liberty of presenting some of its grand periods and advanced positions to our readers for their instruction and entertainment. The article on Draper's History of the War reminds one of the labor and skill displayed by the Demonstrator in preparing the "subject" for the evening medical lecture. One is amazed and instructed as he notices the marvellous handling of the scalpel, its intelligent and firm incisions, and clean gashes. It requires some such instrument to lay open and separate between the prejudices and the facts which enter into Mr. Draper's contribution to history. The article on Julian is full of information, giving in an available form to a one-hour reader the important points in the life and faith and authorship of that celebrated Emperor. It shows the real value of his adhesion to Christianity, and the true grounds of his subsequent opposition. His faith, like that of many at the present day, was a political subscription to the winning side, whatever that side might be, whether of Christ or Antichrist.

A most admirable discussion upon the intrinsic merit of "good intentions" appears in the article "J. J. Rousseau." It clears up that nebulous subject, and defines its true shape in a way that will furnish many a preacher, we doubt not, the theme and thought for one good sermon.

Without commenting regularly anything further, we conclude by saying that we welcome this publication and read it with an eagerness which we used only to experience in opening the English Quarterlies.

REVOLUTION.

The following article from the National Intelligencer, of Washington, indicates that the North is awakening, though late it be, to the perils which environ the country and which threaten the destruction of constitutional liberty. The Radical party does not as yet pause in its course. It evidently despairs of holding power by the popular vote, but is determined to secure by force that which may be denied by the people:

PEOPLE OF THE NORTH, ARE YOU FREE?—ARISE AND SPEAK!

Freemen of the North! Know that the clutch of usurpation is at the throat of your ministers of justice; that your treacherous servants, determined to destroy your Constitution, defended by your chief magistrate, have desperately resolved upon abnegating the legislative branch of your government, intrusted to their perfidious hands, and in order to demolish all restraint of treason, are about to destroy all the departments of government, even their own, and lifting your liberties from your sovereign shoulders, to lay all at the feet of a military despot. Know, people of the great free North, that your chains are forged; that the bayonets, as it were, are sharpened, the muskets charged, the orders written, that are to mete out to each one of you what liberty, what property, what life he shall retain. Behold, at your firesides the apparition of the ard for a midnight arrest; in your places of worship, the armed cens of your prayers; in your field at your work tables, on the highbads, the snaky and skulking doteve. Listen! You may hear the dm as it drops in at your startled ear, the palsy that thickens your t free tongue. We tell you that e Supreme Court is to be struck down, that the equal balance of th three great departments is sway from its equilibrium; that the gat tripod of the Republic is to be broken up; that from your politil temples your betrayers are banish your gods, and from the genius of your freedom are wrenching henviolable sceptre. That a few wtches, drunk upon irresponsible wer, loathsome with guilt, hideous with blood, and mad with lust, m riot in your halls of power, throug the degradation of the South, our liberties are to be destroyed our Constitution subverted, your Public dissolved, and your name honored among nations forever.

Arise freemen, in your fiery majesty Consume with the lightning of your powerful rebuke this devilish combination of perfidy and greed. Shake off the fatal incredulity which lays you supine in the midst of peril, and let not the sun go down ere you have shaken the earth with your mighty tread. Gather, in every hamlet in the land, from Key West to Astoria, and send up to heaven the shout of your indignation. The winding sheet of your freedom is woven and its coffin made. Will it die and be buried?

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Senate.—Wilson introduced a bill removing disabilities from certain citizens of Virginia.

The reconstruction bill was resumed. Wilson favored the bill. In opening, said he had in the thirteen years he had been in the Senate listened to a great many speeches. He had heard the domineering Davis, the blustering Toombs, the plausible Mason, the wily Slidell, but he had never listened to a more wicked speech than that delivered by the Senator from Wisconsin Mr. Doolittle) on Thursday last.

Johnson followed with a powerful constitutional argument against the bill.

The bill relieving Gov. Patton passed. Yeas 26, nays 5. Adjourned.

House.—Under the call of States the following among others are introduced: To tax National bonds, removing obstructions at Hellgate; forbidding assessors and collectors from being directly or indirectly interested in forfeitures under the revenue laws; bill by Stevens regulating suffrage on national questions; to regulate appointments of government agents; providing temporary government for Wyoming Territory; bill by Carey to provide uniform currency and liquidate the National debt; relieving McLane College, Tennessee; amending National currency act; supplying documents to agricultural colleges; removal of obstructions in Upper Missouri river; bill allowing transportation from warehouse at Indianola to San Antonio, Texas; declaring compromises for violation of revenue laws felony; for the better organization of the United States District Courts of Louisiana; establishing a Branch Mint at Santa Fe.

A resolution passed repealing the territorial act of Montana, on account of the exclusion of certain classes from suffrage.

Several executive communications were presented.

Also a resolution of the Georgia Convention urging the reorganization of the State government, removal of political disabilities, and modification of the test oath.

Also a petition from members of the Louisiana Convention, praying for the removal of Gen. Hancock and parish and State officials.

A resolution was adopted, after considerable filibustering, under suspension of the rules, instructing the Reconstruction Committee to inquire whether combinations had been made or attempted to obstruct the due execution of the reconstruction laws, with power to send for persons and papers.

The following is the substance of the bill which passed the House today: It enacts that hereafter, no money shall be paid out of the Treasury on the following class of cases growing out of the rebellion, until further action of Congress: 1. On account of seizure, or imprisonment, or for damages, or demurrage, or detention of any appliances of transportation, whether by land or water, in insurrectionary States. 2. For transportation service, tolls, ferriage, etc., beyond the tariff fixed by the Quartermaster General, during the war. 3. For the use and occupation of land in insurrectionary States, and for fortifications and other military defensive purposes during the war.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The Supreme Court to-day rendered an opinion confirming a decision made by Judge Watrous, in the District Court of Texas, relative to a land claim. The opinion derives additional importance from the fact that some years ago the judicial conduct of Judge Watrons was the subject of some animadversions, and the House of Representatives took testimony looking to impeachment for alleged malpractice in that case. After a lapse of twelve years Judge Watrons is relieved of the imputation by the opinion of the supreme tribunal of the land.

JACKSON, Jan. 24.—The Clarion publishes particulars of an outrage perpetrated in Jasper county, Miss., on the 25th or 26th inst. A squad of freedmen, who had been stealing hogs, waylaid a constable's posse, who were searching for them with warrants for their arrest. Two white men were killed, one mortally and five severely wounded. Only one negro wounded and arrested. Several parties are searching for the perpetrators.

The first semi-centennial Masonic celebration of this State, held at Natchez last week, was largely attended. Prof. Thos. G. Gathright was elected Grand Master for the ensuing year.

The convention, after receiving reports of committees, went into committee of the whole for the consideration of the bill of rights. Four sections had been acted upon when the committee rose. The bill will be reported when completed.

The majority report of the Committee on Compensation, which with the minority report was telegraphed, when submitted, was adopted by 48 to 27.

An afternoon session was held to complete the list of collectors of the special tax.

GEN. HAYDEN MAKES A CHANGE IN THE ELECTION ORDER.

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 27.—The following important order was issued to-day:

HEADQUARTERS DIST. OF ALABAMA,
Montgomery, Jan. 27, 1868.

Pursuant to general order No. 16, current series, from these headquarters, Third Military District, at the election to be held in the State of Alabama in accordance with general orders No. 101, series of 1867, the polls shall not be opened at more than three precincts in each county in the said State, and said polls shall be kept open and votes received thereat for four days instead of two days, anything in general orders No. 101 to the contrary notwithstanding. All public barrooms, saloons, and other places for the sale of liquor at the county seats, and all other places where the polls shall be opened, will be closed from 6 o'clock on the evening of the third day of February until 6 o'clock on the morning of the 8th day of February, 1868.

By order of Brevet Brig. Gen. Julius Hayden.

S. C. GREENE,
Captain 6th Infty, Brev't Maj. U. S. A.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The President has nominated J. Ross Brown Minister to China; Wm. Bishop, of Connecticut, Commissioner of Patents; Thos. Price, of New Jersey, Consul General to Havana.

The bill regulating impeachments provides that two-thirds of the Senate may suspend the accused during trial.

The Cabinet meeting to-day was full except Stanton.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $2,900,000.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The following preliminaries to the passage of the bill relieving Gov. Patton of political disabilities illustrates the feeling in the Senate:

Mr. Davis bitterly opposed the bill. This governor Patton was an original traitor, and ought to have a halter around his neck instead of having this Congressional favor bestowed upon him, which would not make him any the less a traitor than he had ever been.

When Davis sat down several Radical Senators went over and shook hands with him.

Stewart said Gov. Patton had been pardoned by the President.

Davis—Does that make him any better.

Stewart—That does not make him any better, but he is sorry for what he has done, and is trying to do better. He was in favor of extending mercy to any rebel who would come forward and show signs of repentance and become a good citizen.

Hendricks was in favor of clemency to all the Southern people, but was not in favor of singling out, as a special work of favor, a man who had taken an oath to support the Constitution of the government of the United States, and then gone into the rebellion.

GRASS VALLEY, in California, is pronounced by Commissioner Brown the most productive gold quartz mining district in the world. The annual yield of an area drawn by a radius of four miles is $3,500,000.

The Maryland Legislature are balloting for a United States Senator to succeed Reverdy Johnson. Gov. Swann is, so far, considerably ahead.

LETTER FROM WESSON.

WESSON, Miss., Jan. 24, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Vines and vine-clad hills seem to furnish to poetical temperaments their natural aliment, but pines and pine-clad hills are totally destitute of any such nutritious principle. We doubt if their scanty pickings would furnish nourishment enough for even that hardiest of steeds, the "Pegasus of Fancy." "The vine-clad hills of sunny France" are famous in song, but the pine-clad hills of Copiah fall short of immortality by one letter:

"Poetry fits the former to a T,
But missed the latter by a V."

This, however, is only a transient flash—a Herculean contortion of prisoned genius, indicating a remarkably robust poetical constitution. No amount of tension can stretch the imagination in poetic metres over hills that are neither snow-capped nor cloud-piercing, nor carpeted with verdure whose tints "With the hues of the sky in beauty may vie."

They do not reverberate through the intervening valleys the notes of the shepherd's flute nor the sounds of lowing herds. No pastoral swain "recubans sub tegmine fagi" fills the evening breeze with the praise of his lovely Amaryllis.

These tall, gaunt pines will not be conjured into "heaven-pointing" sentinels, and stubbornly refuse to paraphrase Lebanon's "diadem of cedars." They look lean and hungry, and the inquiring mind thinks here to trace the connection between natural scenery and constitutional temperaments.

Pine-knots supply gas enough for ordinary kindling purposes, but will not support poetical combustion. You may think that nothing but the irritation produced by a case of chronic "cacoethes scribendi" could call forth a communication from the midst of such surroundings. But if the Nicodemus of your metropolis thinks the "Piney Woods" a Nazareth whence no good can come, let him "come and see."

Two years ago Wesson boasted two houses. Under the auspices of the Mississippi Manufacturing Company, and the immediate supervision of the liberal and public-spirited president of the company, Col. J. M. Wesson, it is now fast rising to a position of importance. Its population numbers about eight hundred. It is the seat of a factory that consumes several thousand pounds of cotton and wool per diem, turning out fabrics of the best quality, at prices that defy competition from Northern producers, even in their own markets, and employs about three hundred cheerful, contented, hard-working operatives, who would otherwise have been without the means of subsistence in these times of general scarcity.

At Beauregard, two miles above Wesson, Mr. Moody, the secretary of the company, is erecting works for the manufacture of every description of implements required by Southern agriculturists. We fear the name of "Beauregard Works" is most too thoroughly Southern to insure for them a very extensive Southern patronage. If Mr. Moody's conscience were on the gutta-percha order, we should advise him to stamp the products of his works with the name of some unknown town in Massachusetts. The Southern conscience is so deeply impressed with a sense of its duty of love to enemies that it entirely forgets that its own household and friends have any claims. It is impressed with a profound contempt for the publicans and sinners who love only those that love them.

In this utilitarian age, when the motto on the banners of progress is "No. 1," it is refreshing to see one corporation endeavoring to blend the "utile cum dulci." One feature of Wesson which arrests the attention of every true friend of progress is the Sabbath school. Its pupils and teachers number one hundred and eighty, out of a population of eight hundred. Its prosperity and success is promoted greatly by the attention and influence of Col. Wesson, who superintends not only the Sunday school, but the town generally, and infuses his energy and spirit into all around him. The rope-walk will soon be put into operation by Messrs. Moody and J. M. Wesson, Jr., the first proceeds of which are to be devoted to the erection of churches here and in Beauregard.

The wand of industry in the hand of intelligence has worked wonders amid these bleak pine hills, and supplied the deficiencies of nature by the appliances of art; the beauty which the one denied the other has made manifest in the "evidences of design," in the application of capital to the promotion of the true interests of the South, the development of its resources, and the extension of its influence. The Mississippi Manufacturing Company is in the van of the army that must achieve Southern independence. They are putting forth energy and capital, "the wrestling jews that throw the world," and we trust the "Song of Steam" which daily and nightly cheers their labors will soon sing the paean of their success.

CLAYTON.

PERSISTENCE OF AIM.—The American Presbyterian shows what may be accomplished by unflinching tenacity of aim in overcoming formidable obstacles and achieving great results. The great Freiburg organ, it says, was the work of a poor and unaided man:

The little city of Freyburg, in Switzerland, has the largest organ in the world. When full play it pours forth a tempest of sounds through a forest of pipes, seven thousand and eight hundred in number, shaking the wall and foundations of the old St. Nicholas church, in which it stands. All the musical bands in Boston, New York and Philadelphia combined would not make an orchestra equal in power to this mighty instrument alone.

It is all the work of one man named Aloys Moser. He was poor, he was not thought to be a master of his art, he never received any adequate reward for his labor. Without assistance or suggestion from others he formed the design of building for his native city an organ which travelers from distant nations should turn aside from their journeys to hear, and which, when heard in the darkness of the cathedral at night, should make an hour for them never to be forgotten. And so poor Moser began his life's work, and he persevered for long years, in face of opposition and poverty and ridicule, until his task and his life were finished together. His aim may not have been the highest, nor his motive the best, but he persevered with the faith of a martyr till his work was done, and now it stands among all similar works in the world like Mt. Blanc among the mountains, peerless and alone.

OBITUARIES.

Died, at Wesson, Mississippi, January 15, 1868, AUGUSTUS BERRAN REDDING, aged 40 years and 19 days.

Mr. Redding was a native of Monroe county, Georgia. Brought up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," he early united himself with the Methodist Church, and professed a knowledge of "Him whom to know aright is life eternal."

During the late war he served as a captain in the 31st Regiment of Georgia Volunteers, until near the close of the war, when ill health compelled him to resign his commission and return home.

In December, 1867, he removed to Wesson in the hope that the change might benefit the health of himself and family. But death was not to be thus robbed of his prize, and in less than a month after his removal he fell a victim to the cholera.

Another is dead—only one. "The world knew him not," and sees not that the intensity of a single ray is dimmed by the canceling of his peculiar difference. His acquaintances knew him as a useful citizen, a plain but straightforward man, pursuing no crooked lines of policy in his intercourse with his fellows—honest from principle, not from policy. His family and intimate friends knew him as an affectionate husband and father, adorned with "Christian graces," and walking in the "beauty of holiness," which did not fade in the lengthening shadows of his declining sun. The Captain-general of his faith knew him as the victor in the "good fight," and called him "up higher."

As in the bloom of youth and the vigor of manhood, so at life's close he trusted in the "arm that is mighty to save," and on the "Bridge of Faith" passed safely "over the river."

He has not died—he has only passed through "the valley of the shadow of death."

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST

IN GOLD COIN.

THE BEST INVESTMENT

FOR SURPLUS CAPITAL.

THE ATTENTION OF INVESTors, Trustees, Executors, and others desiring an unusually safe, reliable, and profitable form of permanent investment, is called to the advantages and assurances of the

Central Pacific Railroad

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company offer for sale their FIRST MORTGAGE THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT GOLD BONDS, and submit to investors the following, among other obvious considerations, and invite a comparison with the merits and excellences of any class of corporate securities:

I. These bonds are based upon the most vital and valuable part of the grand National Pacific Railroad, soon to become the main channel of communication on the continent

II. The local settlement and the business therefrom is remarkably large and profitable, and most constantly increase

III. The hardest part of the road is now built, and the remainder will be rapidly carried forward over the Salt Lake plains

IV. The greater part of the means necessary to build the road is provided by the United States Government upon a subordinate lien

V. The State and chief cities of California have contributed upward of $8,000,000 to the enterprise, without lien

VI. The grant of land is destined at an early day to prove of far greater market value than the total of the first mortgage bonds issued upon the road and equipments

VII. This road lies almost entirely along the gold and silver producing regions, and its revenues are received in coin

VIII. The management of this Company has been distinguished for prudence and economy, and the surplus earnings, after payment of expenses and interest, are devoted to construction purposes

IX. The interest liabilities of the Company upon the portion now in operation are less than a third the net earnings

X. Both principal and interest are payable in GOLD, under special provisions of both National and State enactment

The bonds are in sums of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in January and July, and are offered for sale at 96 per cent of their par value and accrued interest from July 1 added, in currency

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

These bonds bid fair to attain the most prominent position among the non-speculative investments of the country, and will be actively dealt in at the money centers in Europe

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of ten to fifteen per cent in addition

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return Express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE RABBIT ON THE WALL.

The cottage work is over,
The evening meal is done;
Hark! through the starlight stillness
You hear the river run.
The little children whisper,
Then speak out, one and all:
"Come, father, make for Johnny
A rabbit on the wall."

He smilingly assenting,
They gather round his chair;
"Now, grandma, you hold Johnny,
Don't let the candle flare."
So speaking, from his fingers
He throws a shadow tall,
That seems, the moment after,
A rabbit on the wall.

The children shout with laughter,
The uproar louder grows;
Even grandma chuckles faintly,
And Johnny chirps and crows.
There ne'er was gilded painting,
Hung up in lordly hall,
Gave half the simple pleasure
This rabbit on the wall.

From the Little Corporal.

QUIT CROWDING.

I never heard of it myself, but they told me out in Illinois that on still nights you can "hear the big potatoes scolding the little ones for crowding so." The little fellows are growing, and there is no room for them all in one hill, and so the big ones scold and bid the little ones keep still. I do not believe all of this story, because potatoes have no mouths, and cannot talk: They have eyes, and if they had mouths they would scold if they could, for potatoes do get terribly crowded sometimes—crowded all out of shape.

My garden is not like an Illinois garden. All my potato hills have more stones in them than potatoes. I have seen boys in Illinois who never saw a stone in any field or garden. They would laugh to see what queer shapes the potatoes have when they grow among stones. A little potato gets between two stubborn stones, and grows itself flat as my hand trying to push the stones away. It is all just the same when little Indian pappooses have their soft heads between two stubborn boards; they grow up flat-head Indians. And the Chinese girl babies have their soft little feet squeezed into sore little lumps by tight bandages; the bandages crowd them all out of shape.

There is a good deal of crowding, and worse than crowding, going on all around me. A hill of corn came up beautifully and grew a foot high, and then stopped and turned yellow and died, all because there was a maple tree that crowded it and took away its sap and sunshine. The other corn-stalks a little way off saw it, and said it was a shame for that great big tree to steal a living away from a little corn family not six weeks old? But when those scolding corn-stalks were grown up, I noticed that they spread out their blades and drank up the sunshine, and would not let the little turnips grow between their rows! and a squash vine got so mad at the corn-stalks that he came up, and ran away beyond the outside row of corn before he'd stop to finish out a big leaf, or grow a blossom, and then he stopped and grew so rich, and fat, and big leaved, that not a leaf of clover, nor a blade of grass could grow, he covered all the ground so.

There is a crowding and a quarrel going on in my garden all summer long. The thistles quarreled with my strawberries, so that I had to go out and hit them with a hoe, and then they would not keep still for more than a week at a time. Then my hens crowded on to my corn, and, do all I could, they ate it all up, leaving me not an ear, no, not a kernel. The cabbages did well until after frost; then a neighbor's cow came to gnaw at them, and leave them nicely white and open for bugs to creep in. So my cabbages got crowded.

That is not all. One night some sort of an animal crowded my setting hens, and sucked every egg, leaving the poor birds sitting sleepily on the shells. Afterward I got a gun and crowded him off and buried him. But how he hated to go! What an awful smell he made. Then I began to notice and to think what a crowding, quarreling world we do live in, to be sure. The bugs and worms were nibbling the leaves away. The robins came and picked off the bugs. The cat came and caught the robins. The dog came and caught the cat and broke her back. What a time!

In the woods the large trees keep the little ones from growing up. In the waters the big fish eat the little fish. In the air the hawk catches the little bird. On land the cattle eat up the growing grass, and by and by men eat up the cattle. That's the way it is and always has been in this world. The stronger crowds the weaker, and uses him up.

Once a mad elephant came rushing along a village street in India, knocking down the little bamboo shanties, pitching men into the air with his tusks, and slapping down the women into the dirt with his trunk. Suddenly he stopped at a little baby in the very middle of the street, looked at him, picked him up tenderly, and set him in at a house door safely, and then went raging along down street again. Wonderful! beautiful! to see such a monstrous creature so kind to a little baby.

A doctor in England had a fine large black dog, larger than any dog anywhere around. One day he broke his leg. The doctor set it and took care of him until his leg was quite strong again. A month afterward this great big dog, fat and black and curly, brought home a little sore, red-eyed doggy running on three legs, and showed him to the doctor to be cured! Wonderful! beautiful! to see a great hearty dog helping a poor, lame, half-starved cur! It is better than crowding or quarreling!

Once I knew a tall, stout, good-looking man, go to a picnic with at least eight little children, six women, and some boys and girls. He put up a swing between two trees, a long swing, and then for hours he stood there, giving all the boys and girls, and all the women and children splendid swings—away up into the air. He worked so hard that he could hardly keep awake long enough to get home; and the next day his arms were stiff and sore. But he is one of the best men I ever knew. He is so very strong that he helps everybody, and so very kind that he never crowds anybody. He does not scold the little potatoes for growing, and he says we that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. And when I tell him that everybody crowds everybody in this word, he says, we don't belong to this world, but to the kingdom of heaven, where He that is chief is servant of all. I've a great mind never to crowd or quarrel any more!

The Chinese Children and the Idol.

Their parents were dead, and they were left to the care of an aunt and grandmother. Their aunt had a wooden idol in her house, which they all worshiped. The little boy's name was San, and his sister's name was Kim. They were sent to a mission school. The teacher of the school wanted to show these children the folly of praying to a dumb idol.

One day she gave them a beautiful flower to smell. They were delighted with its fragrance. Then she held out some fruit to them. It had a bad smell—so bad that they turned away from it. Then she said she did not think their idol could tell the difference between the smell of flower and that of the fruit. She then took a large needle, and asked the children to let her stick it into their arms. They instantly drew back and said, "O no, ma'am, it will hurt us." Then she said she didn't think it would hurt their idol to stick it into him. As they were going home, San told his sister that he was going to try if it was true what the teacher had said. He wanted to find out whether their idol did know anything. His sister was afraid some dreadful thing would happen to him, and she tried to persuade him to give it up. But San said he was determined to try. So when they reached home they went into the room where the idol was. It was fastened to a shelf against a wall. They pushed the table under it. Then San stood on the table and held the flower to the idol, but he took no notice of it. Then he held the decayed fruit to his nose, but he never moved his head, or showed the least signs of displeasure.

"Well," said San, "he does not know any thing about smelling, let's try if he has any feeling."

Then he found a sharp iron, like a skewer. Kim was frightened when she saw her brother go up to the idol with it in his hand. San grasped the iron and stuck it into one of his cheeks. There was no cry, no blood.

"The teacher's right!" said San "He does not know any thing!"

Then he saw how foolish it was to put such a stupid block in the place of God. He determined not to worship him any more. He persuaded his aunt and grandmother to do the same; and they all at last became Christians, and had no other god but the Lord.—San Francisco Spectator.

POLISH FOR SADDLES AND BRIDLES.—Apply the albumen or white of an egg to the saddle, and give it plenty of elbow grease, with the aid of a piece of flannel. The same application to a new saddle, two or three times repeated, will produce that rich dark brown so much desired.

CLEANING KNIVES.—A small clean potato, with the end cut off, is a very convenient medium of applying brick dust to knives, keeping it at about the right moisture, while the juice of the potato assists in removing stains from the surface. We can get a better polish by this method than by any other we have tried, and with less labor.

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE FARMER FEEDETH ALL.

BY CHARLES GODFREY LEELAND.

My lord rides through his palace gate,
My lady sweeps along in state,
The mago thinks long on many a thing;
And the maiden muses on marrying;
The minstrel harpeth merrily,
The sailor plows the foaming sea,
The huntsman kills the good red deer,
And the soldier wars without a fear;
But fall to each, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Smith hammereth cherry-red the sword,
Priest preacheth pure the Holy Word,
Dame Alice worketh broidery well,
Clerk Richard tales of love can tell,
The tap-wife sells her foaming beer,
Dan Fisher fisheth in the mere,
And courtiers ruffle, strut, and shine,
While pages bring the Gascon wine;
But fall to each, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Man builds his castle fair and high,
Wherever river runeth by.
Great cities rise in every land,
Great churches show the builder's hand,
Great arches, monuments, and towers,
Fair palaces and pleasing bowers;
Great work is done, be't here or there,
And well man worketh everywhere;
But work or rest, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

From the Canada Farmer.

TURNIPS FOR GREEN MANURE.

Joseph Harris, formerly of the Genesee Farmer, in a lecture on the cereals, which he delivered at New Haven, February, 1860, says: "I was once on the farm of Mr. Matthews, of Swathan, in Norfolk, England, when he called my attention to a barley stubble, and said that the crop of barley from that field averaged seventy-five bushels per acre. It had been heavily manured for turnips, and the crop was very large, but not having stock sufficient to eat them, the greater portion rotted on the ground, and were ploughed in, of course furnishing a large amount of manure, rich in ammonia."

As a further instance: It was our custom, when we harvested and housed our mangels and Swedish turnips, always to cut off and spread on the ground the leaves of both kinds of roots; we never allowed them to be eaten, because experience had shown that when the leaves and greens were ploughed in, a splendid crop of either wheat or barley (which ever was sown) was sure to follow. In England the turnips stand on the ground during the winter, and throw up high seed stalks in the spring; but the mangels must be housed, as the frost spoils them. The destruction of the turnip root in England on the soil is troublesome, owing to its vitality; but in Canada, if white turnips were sown, and left exposed to the winter frost, they, as well as mangels, would be entirely softened and destroyed, and by spring time be ready for immediate almagamation with the soil.

I will now give a Canadian instance. Some years since a Scottish farmer on one of the worn-out farms in the Niagara district had on his farm one twenty-five acre field, that from continuous cropping was so reduced that no grain whatever would grow on it. He had no spare manure, as the farm would not grow straw enough to make it, but he was determined to thoroughly enrich this piece of land. He therefore prepared the field for mangels, planted them in drills, as well manured in the drill, as he could manage, which was not much, but as the land had never before grown mangels they grew finely. He horse-hoed the roots, then, when the plants were large enough, he ran the cultivator across them in place of singling or pulling them out. He got a heavy crop of tolerably large roots, the whole of which were ploughed in, and the ground summer-fallowed the following year, to kill the weeds. Fall wheat was then sown, and produced sixty bushels per acre. The wheat was seeded down well with clover, and as soon as the clover was in flower the next year it was ploughed under with a ball and chain. This treatment got the land into thorough heart, and with judicious management since, that field, even till now, continues the best on the farm.

It is a well-known fact that where sheep are not kept on mountainous or other extensive pasture, the English farmer neither makes nor expects to make any profit on the sheep over and above the manure which they furnish by consuming the roots and oil cake on the farm. If the sheep pay for the outgoings and interest on their purchase, and leave the farmer the manure free, he considers himself richly paid, and so he is. In Canada we do better than that, so far as buying and selling the sheep is concerned, but still the generality of farmers are content to keep but few sheep, and only those that they can winter through on pea straw, and some few roots, without difficulty. Sheep, in any great number, cannot be fattened or indeed kept successfully in Canada through the winter without being housed, and it is not one farm in five hundred where three hundred sheep can be housed during the winter.

In "The Canada Farmer," 16th April, 1866, P. Murison writes: "I would like to know if ploughing in a turnip crop is a good plan for manuring ground. I generally take in the turnips themselves, and plough in the leaves. Which is the best?"

"The Canada Farmer" answers: "If you have cattle to consume the roots, the latter is clearly the most judicious course."

Now I doubt this. I believe that the cattle and sheep take away more than they leave behind. I was discussing the matter with a clever Englishman, who had been head laborer, or grieve, on a large English farm, where they made their own superphosphate; he had never discussed the idea of destroying turnips on the land before, and at first seemed to look on it as a horrible piece of extravagance; but when I told him the amount of solid constituents of the turnip, and how much of that must necessarily go into the sheep, and be carried away with them, perception dawned upon him, and he exclaimed in a sort of rapture, "yes, you are right; I see it now. If you were to take all the lambs which can be bred up on one hundred acres of turnips, and dissolve them with sulphuric acid, you would have a grand lot of superphosphate, enough to manure two such lots of turnips, and by feeding these turnips on the ground the sheep carry away the whole of it." Well, he was delighted at the discovery, and went away fully determined to grow and plough in all the turnips he could manage to get into the ground.

But few people are aware of the extent to which green crops are ploughed under in some parts of Canada. Thus, on the sandy land about what is known as the Long Point country, county of Norfolk, it is not unusual to plough in one, two, and even three sowings of buckwheat in the course of one season. The first sowing, possibly, will hardly cover the ground; the second is better, and the third is a full crop, the ground producing a good crop of wheat afterward. But the season in that district is the longest in Canada, or otherwise they could not do as they do. When they can once raise a good crop of clover, they prefer to plough it under as soon as it is in flower, and then sow fall wheat afterward; without clover their land in the sandy portions would not repay the cost of cultivation.

On the plains in Haldimand and Hamilton, back of Cobourg, they carry out the same system to a great length. The land there was bare of trees, except oak scrub; it was a poor sand, with a hard clay subsoil. For many years it was considered unfit for cultivation, until some of the Brantford plains people went down there. They began with buckwheat, following with clover and plaster, and soon showed the capabilities of the soil. By a gradual bringing up of the hard clay subsoil they have greatly improved the land, and they now adopt the following course: The wheat stubbles are ploughed under in the fall; then, as soon as the frost is out of the ground, and at the earliest possible moment, they sow a good thick crop of peas; as soon as the peas are well in flower, they plough them under with a proper implement, and sow buckwheat thick; the buckwheat comes to a full crop, and is again ploughed under in the fall; next year spring wheat follows, and they are sure of a first-rate crop. Plenty of clover seed is sown with the spring wheat. The next year the clover is ploughed under as soon as it is in bloom, and that same fall winter wheat is sown with the certainty of a first-rate crop. The wheat is clovered down, stands for hay, and the second crop is ploughed under for spring grain. If the clover heads are ripe enough, the spring crop is self-seeded with the clover. They then plough for another crop of oats, barley or otherwise, as the necessity of the farm required. All the people there who have adopted this plan have become rich, and the land cannot be now purchased at any reasonable rate. These plain lands are very early, and the fall wheat is always ahead of the midge, and the quality of the grain is the very best in Canada; but the straw is short, and were it not for the green crops so ploughed under, manure would be out of the question. Plaster is freely used.

I have thus strung together all the information I could for the present obtain on this important subject. The success of the plan depends upon the length to which it is carried. One thing is quite clear—it cannot be carried too far. If it is found to make the wheat too gross, a crop of oats, barley, or rye will reduce the redundancy of the growth of the wheat, and bring it within reason.

Now I want all the persons who may read this to find fault with it, pitch into it right and left, hit hard, make fun of it, do anything but pass it over in silence. There may and must be some discussion, but silence helps no one, not even to the extent of making them think.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Doremus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $50 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades, and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment; God's Word; Christ's Word; the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1,50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year; or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

All communications on business should be addressed to

PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC,

Or, Vegetable Medicine.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited no new feature since our last issue. The wholesale trade shows a slight improvement in some branches, but this is far from being general, and we hear continued complaints of unabated dullness. With a rise in the tributaries and an increase in the receipts of cotton we may reasonably anticipate some revival of the demand for the interior, but as yet few country merchants have made their appearance, compared with what is usual at this season of the year. Nothing of any moment has been done in tobacco, and the movement in Western produce has been of moderate extent, but generally at firmer prices, owing to the stocks running low from the interrupted navigation above Cairo. The river being again open, we may anticipate more liberal receipts.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed, under the stimulating influence of the accounts from Liverpool, at an advance of ¼ to ⅛c., Ordinary being quoted at 14 to 15c., Good Ordinary at 15¾ to 16, Low Middling at 16¾ to 17, Middling at 17¼ to 17½, and Strict Middling at 17¾ to 18, since which there has been a further improvement of fully ¼c. On Saturday the movement commenced with moderate sales at about Friday's figures, but on the receipt of the Liverpool telegrams factors raised their pretensions, and the subsequent sales were at an advance of ¼ to ⅜c., mostly on the basis of 17 to 17¼c. for Low Middling, and 17½ to 17¾ for Middling, but partly at ¼c. higher. The demand was fair, and the sales summed up 4,800 bales. On Monday the high prices asked checked operations. In fact there were very few buyers who could purchase at the limits of their pending orders, and the business was consequently confined to 2,500 bales, but prices showed increased buoyancy, Low Middling commanding 17¼ to 17½c., and Middling 17¾ to 18. On Tuesday the market opened under the unfavorable influence of dark and rainy weather, which continued throughout the day, and the movement being, moreover, restricted by the moderate extent of the supply offering, as well as by the limits of many of the leading buyers being below the ruling rates, only 2,500 bales changed hands, while prices were barely maintained, offers being accepted in several cases which had been previously refused.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 9,800 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 9,395 bales, against 10,498 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 2,103 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 322,438 bales, against 448,969 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 141,326 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 63,588 bales to Great Britain, of 56,666 to France, and of 93,987 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	14½ to 15½
Good Ordinary	16½ to 16¾
Low Middling	17½ to 17¾
Middling	17½ to 18
Strict Middling	18½ to 18¾

MOLASSES.—The demand has again been active, at full prices, and the sales since our last review embrace 1,500 bbls., all the receipts, at 45 to 55c. per gallon for Inferior, 58 to 60c. for Common, 60 to 75c. for Fermenting, as in quality, 65 to 70c. for Fair, 75c. for light Cistern bottoms, 68c. for Centrifugal, 78c. for Good, 80c. for Prime, not reboiled, and 72½ to 80c. for reboiled, as in quality.

FLOUR.—The market has been steady and firm, with a great scarcity of Double Extra and the grades below.

CORN.—The market has been steady and firm, with a fair demand at full prices.

PORK.—The market has continued steady and firm. A brisk trade is doing in a jobbing way at $22 25 to $22 50 per bbl. for Mess.

LARD.—Prime and choice is in light supply and in request at full prices.

BISHOP SIMPSON says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the best Magazines published for children."

BISHOP STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I believe that its introduction into every household would prove a blessing to young and old."

REV. GEO. D. BOARDMAN says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I am delighted with 'The Children's Hour.' I do not see how a more entertaining, instructive or profitable Magazine could be put in the hands of our children."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"This dear little monthly visitant we believe to be by far the purest, safest, and most attractive magazine for the little one's at home, published in this country."

MR. JOHN B. GOUGH says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I can endorse it thoroughly. It is a most welcome visitor to the family of children at my own home."

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR" is as beautiful as the best typography and the best artists can make it. Two volumes a year, beginning in January and July. The number for January, 1868, will be the most beautiful number of a child's magazine ever published. Terms as above.

Popery is a Cunning Compound of Superficial Truth and Solid Error.

BY PROF. J. B. A. AIKENS.

THE VULGATE, APOCRYPHA, AND TRADITION.

The council of Trent had the profane audacity, the blasphemy, to pronounce the Vulgate, Apocrypha, and the traditions to have divine authority, affirming the Latin version, called the Vulgate, to be equal to the Hebrew and Greek originals, and the Apocrypha and tradition to be coequals of the Bible.

I. We examine the claim of the Vulgate's divinity.

(1.) The translation of the Bible, termed the Vulgate, was the work of Jerome. He is reputed to have been the most learned of the Latin fathers, though in point of logic and profundity he was certainly Augustine's inferior. But with all his vast erudition Jerome was assuredly not inspired. Hence must his uninspired translation be tried by the inspired originals.

(2.) The Vulgate differs in many material points from the Hebrew and Greek originals. What folly, therefore, to claim divine authority for the Vulgate, even where wrongly translated? Is there divinity even in its error? Is fallible Jerome superior to the infallible writers of the holy oracles?

(3.) Even after the council of Trent several popes have made some thousand corrections in the Vulgate. Thus the previously declared inspired translation was deemed imperfect! Moreover, Bellarmine, a celebrated papal champion, declares the Vulgate to require many alterations and emendations.

(4.) The Vulgate is not by any means superior to the authorized English translation or even that in German by Luther. Now suppose a Protestant council in London or Berlin to pronounce these translations to have divine authority, to be equal to the Hebrew and Greek originals? What would the papal world say to this? Would not their outcry, denunciation and imprecation be both loud and long? But if Protestants are required to maintain verity, are Romanists at liberty to proclaim an official lie?

(5.) The Vulgate, we know, has divine authority if heaven-born, or if true and correct, if it agree fully with the sacred and inspired original. But heaven-born it is not, and with the original it agrees not. What presumption, therefore, in the council of Trent to declare it, at the expense of criticism, a kind of incomparabilis—the true word of God!

II. To prove the apocryphal books to be wholly without divine authority we offer the following reasons—not as all, but enough:

They are nowhere mentioned or alluded to in the New Testament, receiving no notice, much less sanction, from Jesus Christ or the apostles.

They are not received into the sacred canon of the Jewish church, to whom, in the olden time, were committed the oracles of God, (Rom. 3: 2.) Were the books inspired, their inspiration would have been known to and proclaimed by the Jewish people.

They were not received into the sacred canon, the canon of Scripture, by the early Christian church. They were then either not known or were known as human.

They were never viewed as declaredly inspired by the early enemies of Christianity—Celsus, Porphyry, Julian, and others.

Not one of the whole was written in Hebrew, the language of the Old Testament, all of them being in Greek, excepting Esdras, &c., and that being in Latin.

The apocryphal writers, with two exceptions, do not claim inspiration. Some of them only disclaim it.

The Apocrypha really contains folly and error, weak things and wrong ones, and is even in some points of moment opposed and contradicting the Bible.

No other external or internal proof of inspiration that belongs to the Bible belongs to the Apocrypha.

Reader, we hope that these reasons will content your mind, as they content our own. Going from the special to the general, from the particular to the universal, we remark that the circumstantial arguments showing the divine authority of the Bible does not support for the Apocrypha.

III. Tradition. We sooner turn our thought to the subject of tradition than we think of the Talmudical trash of the Jews. Should not the tendency and evil of Hebrew tradition have been a warning to Christians to beware of such dangerous cliffs? Christ says of them (Matt. 15: 6) "Ye have made the word of God of none effect by your traditions." But disregarding this, the Romanists have traditionized upon tradition, obtained through the channel of priestly guile, resting on no authority but the actions of priests, being impotent for anything good, though lamentably potent for evil. We shall briefly show that the papal traditions have no scriptural or rational ground to stand upon:

(1.) We have positive proofs that the Jewish traditions were without divine authority under the Old Testament dispensation.—Therefore we fairly infer, from analogy, that oral traditions derived from God do not exist under the reign of the gospel.

(2.) As God enabled men infallibly to write a part He probably enabled them so to write the whole. Why should God commit a part of His divine will to the firm hold of writing, and leave the rest to the frail keeping of mere memory or mere morality a long line of priests?

(3.) Setting up oral traditions as a rule of faith is lowering and degrading the Bible. Tradition would then be regarded too much and Scripture too little.

(4.) The Christian fathers do neither allow nor disallow oral tradition. Their rule of faith was the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible.

(5.) Apostolic tradition would tend to exalt the clergy at the expense of the laity. It would afford a handle for ecclesiastical corruption, priestly pride, power and the like. The honor of the tradition and the dishonor of the priesthood have always gone hand in hand.

(6.) How utterly improbable the pure descent of tradition! How impossible for the unwritten word to be handed down to our time uncorrupted, free from alteration, addition or subtraction! Would God require us to depend on the memory and honesty of thousands or millions of men in a great multitude of particulars?

(7.) According to the rule of Vincent, of Lerins, to constitute a binding apostolical or ecclesiastical tradition it is necessary that it should have been held semper, ubique, et ab omnibus. How small a number will that rule sanction!

Rome runs a fearful risk in profanely tampering with the sacred record. It incurs an awful responsibility in making it to appear that the divine revelation is an insufficient directory to heaven. Woe unto Rome! for it attributes the Vulgate, Apocrypha and tradition to God, with a view of protecting, by their adulterine aid, things that God's word refuses to sanction! "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it; thou shalt not add thereto nor diminish from it," (Deut. 12: 32.) See also Rev. 22 and Gal. 1: 9.

The Distribution of Supplies and the Employment of Labor.

REGULATIONS OF FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

We publish this morning two important circulars, just issued by Gen. Buchanan, Commandant of the Freedmen's Bureau in this State. It will be perceived that the regulations in regard to the distribution of supplies to the unemployed freedmen, and to the "indigent and helpless," have a wide scope, and cannot fail to exert a most important influence upon the planting interest in this State. We commend them to the careful consideration of our readers:

HEADQUARTERS BUREAU OF REFUGEES, FREEDMEN AND ABANDONED LANDS, STATE OF LOUISIANA, New Orleans, La., Jan. 23, 1868.

Circular No. 1.

In order to carry out the instructions contained in Letter from War Department, Bureau Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, dated Washington, D. C., Jan. 7th, 1868, and, to relieve extreme want occasioned by reason of freedmen being without employment, through inability of planters to furnish supplies, it is hereby announced that as far as may be in the power of the Bureau, aid will be furnished in such case under the following regulations:

ART. I. 1. Duplicate copies of contract, under which freedmen are employed, must be filed in the office of Bureau Agent in the parish.

2. For supplies of corn meal and meat, advanced by the Bureau, a formal first lien will be taken upon the crops and movables used in cultivation of the same, for reimbursement for cost of such supplies.

These supplies will be furnished each month, until the necessity for such issue no longer exists, and in each case the lien will be taken as stated.

3. Upon receipt by the planter of the first month's supplies he will file in the office of the Bureau Agent of the parish duplicate bonds, with good and sufficient security, in the amount of $1,500 for every twenty freedmen employed, stipulating that for and in consideration of supplies furnished by the Bureau, to the freed people employed as laborers on his plantation during the year of 1868, he binds himself to reimburse to the Bureau, before the expiration of said year, the full cost of such supplies, from the proceeds of the crops, or other products of industry, raised by him, or from the movables on the plantation, used in the cultivation of the crop; and he further agrees that when said crops, or other products, are prepared for market, that the same, or his portion thereof, shall be shipped, for sale, to such merchants as may be designated by the Bureau, in the city of New Orleans, La., and that, immediately upon the sale of said crops, a sufficient amount of the proceeds accruing therefrom, to the full amount, if necessary, shall be turned over to the proper officer of the Bureau, in liquidation of his just indebtedness for the subsistence advanced. He further stipulates and agrees, that, should there still be a balance due the Bureau, after the proceeds of the crop have been thus applied, then, and in that event, the movables and other goods on the plantation shall be liable therefor.

A copy of the contract and bond will be forwarded to these headquarters by the Assistant Sub-Assistant Commissioner on duty in the parish.

ART. II. With a view to systematize the issuing of supplies, as indicated in the preceding article, the following detailed instructions will be strictly complied with:

1. A planter who may be unable to furnish supplies to the freedmen in his employ, and desires to procure them from the Bureau, will apply to the Bureau Agent of the parish, and file in his office affidavits, in duplicate, stating whole number of freed people employed, for whom rations are required during the month, and specifying number of pounds of corn meal or hard bread, and number of pounds of meat, needed for the subsistence of the freed people on his plantation, and further, that he is not able to furnish subsistence for them in any other manner. The Parish Agent, after being fully satisfied of the reliability of the planter, of the correctness of the number of freed people reported as employed in each case, and of necessity of the Bureau advancing the supplies, will then forward to these headquarters a duplicate of the affidavit and application for approval. The supplies will then be procured and shipped to the Bureau Agent in the parish.

2. The cost of the supplies, including that of transporting them to the agent, will be charged against the planter requiring them, by the officer procuring and forwarding the same.

3. Said charges will be communicated to the Parish Agent, and will in like manner be entered upon books, prepared for the purpose, in his office.

4. Upon receipt of the supplies the Parish Bureau Agent will, if necessary, cause the same to be transported to the plantation where they are required.

5. The cost of this transportation will be an additional charge against the planter, and the agent will immediately report to the Assistant Commissary of Subsistence, at these headquarters, the amount of such additional charge, in order that the same may be charged on his books.

6. Upon the delivery of the supplies to the planter he will receipt to the agent for the number of pounds of each article of subsistence, on which receipt will be specified the full cost of the supplies, including all charges on same up to time of delivery by the Parish Bureau Agent.

7. These receipts will be in duplicate, and to each will be attached an agreement, on part of planter, giving to the Bureau a formal lien, or first privilege, upon crops and movables, as specified above. The agent will then retain one copy on file, and forward duplicate to the Assistant Commissary Subsistence at these headquarters.

8. At the end of each month the Parish Agent will forward to these headquarters a full report of all supplies issued in accordance with the foregoing directions.

It must be constantly borne in mind by the Bureau Agents that the distribution of the supplies is solely for the purpose of securing employment to the freedmen by enabling the planter to furnish them with subsistence for the time being, and whenever the planter becomes able, from any cause, to furnish his employes the necessary subsistence, the advances made by the Bureau will be immediately discontinued, and the fact so reported to these headquarters, in order that the account with such employer may be closed.

In the adoption of this system agents are instructed to advise freedmen to contract to labor, during the year, for stipulated monthly wages, if in all cases, when it is in the power of the planter so to do.

The experience of the past two years has clearly proven the disadvantage of working for shares. The former system should be given preference—whenever found practicable—as it establishes labor upon a fixed and certain basis, preventing the endless complications and numerous difficulties incident to the system of shares.

In this connection agents are instructed that their action with reference to the character of the contracts with the freedmen is to be advisory, and by no means compulsory. The freedman is authorized to make his contract on such terms as may be most agreeable to himself.

Many planters are unable, through want of means, to pay freedmen wages, and can only employ them on the system of shares in crops raised. In all such cases Bureau Agents will, when called upon, furnish all necessary assistance, as provided under existing orders.

ARTICLE III. Monthly Reports of "Indigent and Helpless," specified in Circular No. 19, series of 1867, from these headquarters, will be made and forwarded as heretofore, and must include only those destitute who are unable to labor, or otherwise to provide for themselves, and to whom the parish or other local authorities fail to render the necessary assistance, to prevent starvation and suffering.

The utmost care will be taken by the agents not to include the accounts of the indigent and helpless with those of the laborers who receive assistance through the planter. In all cases their accounts must be distinct and separate.

Subsistence for the indigent and helpless will be issued gratuitously, and will be accounted for in accordance with instructions heretofore promulgated.

The necessary blanks will be furnished to agents requiring them on their application for the same to these headquarters.

By order of Brev't Maj. Gen. R. C. BUCHANAN, U. S. A., Assistant Commissioner.

Headquarters Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, District of Louisiana, No. 191 Julia St., New Orleans, Jan. 24, 1868.

Frequent applications being made to these headquarters for the transfer of freedmen from parishes where they are unemployed to parishes where they can be secured employment on plantations during the year, the following instructions are hereby promulgated for the information and guidance of the agents of this Bureau:

No planter will be furnished with labor from another parish than that in which he is planting, unless he can pay money wages to those whom he wishes to employ.

Before taking steps to procure laborers for a planter the agent shall be furnished by him, in duplicate, with a full, clear and explicit statement of the terms on which he proposes to engage them, the number of freedmen wanted, and the families to be provided for being distinctly specified.

This statement will be accompanied by a bond obliging the planter to employ the laborers, and provide for the families of such as have families, immediately on their arrival at the point in the parish designated by the Bureau Agent.

Immediately on the arrival of the freedmen the contracts with them shall be executed, on the proper form, under the Bureau Agent, and two copies of the same filed in his office.

The expenses of transporting the freedmen from one parish to the other, including their subsistence en route, will be deducted from their monthly wages and paid over to the Bureau Agent in the parish in the following manner:

The cost of their subsistence and one-third of the cost of transportation at the end of first thirty days; one-third of the cost of transportation at the end of second month, and the remainder at the end of third month.

The Bureau Agent who may be called upon to furnish the laborers required will then endeavor to secure the required number from the unemployed freedmen in his parish.

He will clearly explain to them the nature of the terms upon which they are to be employed, and will in each case inform the freedmen of the name of the planter desiring to employ him, and as nearly as possible the location of his plantation.

Should a sufficient number consent and agree to be thus employed, he will immediately make application direct to these headquarters for the number of pounds of corn meal and meat necessary to feed said freedmen, including wives and children of those who are married, until they reach their destination; also, application for transportation, if the same is not otherwise provided for, specifying the number of grown persons and the number between five and fourteen years of age, as well as the points from and to which the freed people are to be transported, route, etc.

Upon receipt of said application the necessary transportation and supplies will be furnished him, together with the cost of rates of transportation and the cost of supplies, including freight on latter.

The Bureau Agent will then collect the freed people together, taking care to have an exact list of the names and ages of all intended for each separate planter, issue to them their rations, and ship them in accordance with transportation order.

At time of shipment he will place them under charge of some reliable person, generally a representative from the planters who have agreed to employ them, and will give positive orders and instructions to such person that said freed people will, upon arrival at the point of destination, be turned over to the Bureau Agent in that parish.

The agent shipping the freed people, as stated, will communicate direct to the other agent the fact that he has shipped them, which will be accompanied by a separate report of the names and number of freed people who have engaged to work for each planter, specifying full cost of rations at time of issue, and stating rates and total amount for the number transported in each case.

Upon the arrival of the freed people in the parish where they are to be employed the Bureau Agent or [illegible] in that parish will immediately take charge of them, and will at once cause proper contracts in triplicate to be executed with the planter for whom they were engaged, in accordance with the agreement on file in his office, special reference being had to the list of freedmen intended for that plantation, as furnished by the agent by whom they were engaged.

The agent will then turn over to the planter the proper freed people, and will at the same time furnish him a duplicate of the list on which is specified the cost of the transportation and subsistence furnished each of the freed people employed by him.

Upon complying with the foregoing directions, each agent will forward through their respective Sub-Assistant Commissioners a complete report of all action taken.

At the end of each month the agent apportioning the amounts to be paid for subsistence and transportation, as stated, will collect from the planters the proper amounts as specified in the foregoing, and will turn over the same to the proper disbursing officer at these headquarters.

"A LADY visited New York city and saw on the sidewalk a ragged, cold and hungry little girl, gazing wistfully at some of the cakes in a shop window. She stopped, and taking the little one by the hand, led her to the store. Though she was aware that bread might be better for the cold child than cake, yet desiring to gratify the shivering and forlorn one, she bought and gave her the cake she wanted. She then took her to another place, where she procured her a shawl and other articles of comfort. The grateful little creature looked the benevolent lady full in the face, and with artless simplicity said, "Are you God's wife?"

GRAIN ELEVATORS.—We learn that Mr. Merry, of Dubuque, (the same gentleman who recently shipped several barge-loads of grain from that point to Boston via New Orleans,) had determined to build a large elevator either in the city or in Algiers. This fact shows the light in which the capitalists of the West regard the future of New Orleans. That a gentleman coming from the center of the wheat trade of the Northwest should put $200,000, the amount Mr. Merry's elevator is to cost, into a project, the success of which depends, in a great measure, upon the direction of that trade to our city, demonstrates that at least one man competent to judge deems the thing not only possible, but probable.—*N. PARIS correspondents of the London press say a feeling of uneasiness is perceptible in political and financial circles. Though no one believes that war is threatened from any quarter, still the great activity in the arsenals and dockyards of France, and the pressure brought to bear upon the Corps Legislatif for the passage of the Army bill, are circumstances which contribute to unsettle the feeling of security in the public mind, and to impair confidence in the stability of peace.

From the Leisure Hour.

WIDOW No. 3.

Mr. Dovedale had a long walk before he arrived at the humble lodging occupied by Mrs. Mayblossom.

'Yes, I dare say she is melancholy now; she has enough to make her,' he thought; 'and if, as Mrs. Innes says, she was so in her prosperous days, what am I to expect to see in this hour of trying adversity?'

He did not regret his purpose of visiting her, but he felt that he should be very glad when it was over. He was fairly tired when he knocked for admittance. A pretty boy, in black, opened the door, and answered his inquiries with great politeness. The room he was ushered into was very small, and the table was covered with needlework and books. The widow and her three daughters and one of her sons were all seated, busily engaged.

Mr. Dovedale hardly knew where to go, or to put his hat, but with wonderful celerity the coast cleared, the pretty boy took his hat from him with a respectful, courteous air, and a third time he found himself seated by a fireside.

There was no soft rug with disobedient pile, no shining steel for the fire to dance in; indeed, the fire seemed more inclined to go to sleep than to dance; but the grate was clean, and if it had not been such a cold, dark day, it would have looked cheerful enough.

Mrs. Mayblossom apologized with easy grace for the full occupation of the room. 'We have visitors so seldom,' she said, 'that we are not prepared for them; indeed, we could not very well be so. We are a large party with little space.' As she spoke the work was gathered into a large basket of an ornamental kind, and the books were put into their places on the stand, and everything looked right and orderly.

Mr. Dovedale couldn't open his mission before the young people. He introduced himself as having been a little acquainted with the late Captain Mayblossom, whose name he hardly liked to pronounce, since the widow's weeds had only just been assumed.

Mrs. Mayblossom fixed her eyes on him as he spoke, and said with calm tenderness, "You knew him? Then you loved him; everybody who knew him loved him'

Mr. Dovedale felt relieved by her quietude, and answered that his knowledge had been very slight; he added, with embarrassment, that he had heard some particulars of his long illness and death that morning, and had called to make a few inquiries about it. As he spoke he glanced significantly at the young people, who, without a word from their mother, took the hint and left the room one by one, till he was alone with the widow.

'You wished to hear of my beloved husband's death,' she said, when they had closed the door. 'I cannot describe to you the peace and joy of his last moments—his last moments of the whole of his illness—but the last was the seal of the whole; not a doubt, not a care, not a fear.'

Mrs. Mayblossom spoke with animation; her face, very pale before, glowed, and her eyes brightened—there was an expression of happiness in her countenance that almost seemed like a smile. Mr. Dovedale was very much struck. He expressed his satisfaction that such was the case, and hoped he was not intruding on her grief, so very recent, assuring her he came from no motive of idle curiosity, but simply to know the truth and to act upon it. Mrs. Mayblossom replied that it was not really recent; she had been looking for his loss too long to feel it a shock, 'and seeing him after so long a trial of suffering sink peacefully into rest—real rest in the arms of his Saviour—was more than payment for all.'

'But your loss is great,' said Mr. Dovedale.

'Loss!—it is beyond loss,' she said, with some emotion. 'I have parted with myself, and yet we were so completely one that I cannot feel separated. I cannot bring him down here (nor would I,) but I can follow him in the contemplation of that Saviour whose love he rested in; I am again with him; his memory is identified with my hopes of rest and happiness.'

'This is a widow,' thought Mr. Dovedale.

Mrs. Mayblossom now entered into some details descriptive of her husband's faith, and illustrative of the good hand of God on him and on her—showing how they were helped, how they were cheered, supported, taught—in short, how that dark season had been continually brightened by heavenly light.

Mr. Dovedale listened with deep interest; she did not cease till she was wearied with talking; then her cheek grew pale and languid, but there was the same serenity in her face.

'We certainly ought to exercise more faith,' he said; 'but had he no drawback with respect to your ability to provide for your family?'

'He thought gravely, but not sorrowfully for it; he committed us to our covenant God, who has told us to cast all burdens on him.'

'Yes, but you see, my dear friend, there are certain matters of fact that must be attended to; God does not work miracles.'

'Pardon me, he does!' said the widow, smiling; 'I see it daily.'

Mr. Dovedale smiled too, for he knew what she meant.

'I could tell you of innumerable mercies, every one a miracle, that have been showered down on me since I have been in need. The Lord has graciously led me, I may say, by sight, not by faith, for I do so plainly see his hand in all that to fear for anything would be foolishly perverse. No, no; I know his love; he will provide—he does—he will to the end!'

There was no excitement in Mrs. Mayblossom's manner, but a quiet firmness which gave an air of reality to what she said.

'That is a fine youth that opened the door; is he—have you settled anything for him?' Mr. Dovedale inquired, after a pause.

'Alick,' replied the widow, with a sweet smile, 'he is a comfort to me beyond description. He is very desirous of entering the army. As yet he is too young to take any active step. We shall see. I am teaching him all I can with his sisters, and when Parker, my eldest boy, is at home he helps him.'

'What are you doing with him?' asked Mr. Dovedale.

'Nothing,' said the widow, smiling; 'that is one of my miracles. His uncle has taken upon himself his whole education for the army—very kind of him—but, indeed, all Captain Mayblossom's friends have shown sympathy, according to what they saw right and just, toward their own families. I was a poor orphan, without a relative on whom I had any claim.'

'And your daughters?' asked Mr. Dovedale.

'Marion, the eldest, is going as nursery governess to her aunt. She is superior to the situation, but I consider it a great blessing for her to go among very young children, whom she will find less difficulty in training in the right way—a way in which she has consistently walked for three years past.' The same sweet smile came over Mrs. Mayblossom's face as she spoke.

'And the others?' asked Mr. Dovedale.

'The others will remain with me till the hand of God moves them. I can bring them on in all that I know myself. I am not anxious about that.'

'But your health?' said Mr. Dovedale, looking as he spoke on her bending figure and thin, pale face.

'I am stronger than I seem—not very strong—but since I have had more to do I think my health is better. I am not at all afraid. "As my day my strength will be."'

'I am afraid,' said Mr. Dovedale, glancing around the little room, 'your circumstances must be rather straitened.'

'O yes, very poor,' said the widow, 'but I consider that I am like people who have money in the bank, and never keep much in the house; when they want it, they go to the bank and get it. Don't misunderstand me,' she added quickly, noticing Mr. Dovedale's look of surprise; 'I don't believe the Lord will supply my fancied wants, only my real ones. I have a settled income, slender indeed, but sufficient unless any extraordinary call should arise; and for any such real call I know he will provide.'

'Is there any such pressing on you now?' asked Mr. Dovedale, gently. 'You may feel sure I have but one object in asking.'

Mrs. Mayblossom looked at him a moment; her eye brightened. She went to her desk on the table, and took out a long blue paper, which to any practiced eye would have declared itself a bill. 'This came in a week ago,' she said. 'I had no knowledge of the debt; my dear husband must have forgotten it. The death of the man has obliged his widow to call in all her money. I have pleaded for time, that I might be able by self-denial to save the money, unless help to pay the demand came.'

'You may plead the Statute of Limitations,' said Mr. Dovedale, looking at the bill, which was for part of an outfit, and came to £19 17*s.* 6*d.*

'It is a heavy sum,' exclaimed Mrs. Mayblossom; 'but the debt is a just one, no doubt. O no, I shall be able to pay it in time; but this is just such a call as I alluded to.'

Mr. Dovedale asked for pen and ink, and wrote a check for twenty pounds, which he handed to her, saying, 'Now you will call this a miracle.'

'Assuredly,' said the widow, the tears rising to her eyes. 'May He who sent you on this errand pay his messenger! He will!'

Mr. Dovedale felt that he had been amply paid by the lesson he had been taught. As he put his hand into his pocket for his gloves he felt Mrs. Wickwork's half-crown. 'Poor creature!' he inwardly ejaculated.

—'So,' he thought, as he walked home, 'money, connections, comforts, what are they all to faith—living, practical faith? Those two widows are depending on mere streams: this one is at the fountain-head. They may be disappointed at the drying up of their resources any moment—she, never.'

Sarah was puzzled that evening by the abstraction of his manner, and she thought, as he read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, which he chose at prayer-time, that he seemed to be reading it more to himself than to her, for he stopped continually as if reflecting on it; and so he was, for a new light had fallen on the page, the light of example, and he also remembered the words, 'according to your faith be it unto you.'

THE MASSACRE IN FIJI.

We have already noted in brief the murder of one of the Wesleyan missionaries by the cannibals on one of the Fiji Islands. The Wesleyan "Missionary Notices" for December bring us full particulars. The faithful and indefatigable missionary, Rev. Thomas Baker, with several others, left his home on the 18th of July to visit some of the inland tribes. On Sunday, the 21st, he and a native assistant missionary, with six others, were most cowardly and brutally killed, and their bodies probably eaten by the natives. Two of Mr. Baker's party escaped alive. This murder, we believe, is the first among the Wesleyan preachers of the South Sea Islands. As an illustration of the kind of labor put forth by the zealous missionaries, and particularly by Mr. Baker, we give the following extract from one of his letters, describing a previous journey among the native cannibals:

We were frequently compelled to stop and gasp for breath, the land being so precipitous; and what with perspiration and rain, we were completely saturated by the time we reached the town. Vunibua and this town were the great objects of my present visit. I believe this town had not been visited before by a European; so you may imagine the consternation of many when they saw my pallid face. We were very kindly received by the people, which kindness was not only manifested in word, but in deed, for they brought an abundance of food for myself and men. This town was not included in the meeting at Vunibua, being only an appendage to "Soloira." We talked to them about the lotu, and were happy to find they were "willing in the day of the Lord." They also expressed their wish to receive a teacher. So we had the drum beaten, and D. Nauhaamea addressed them until compelled to desist through the rain.

In this town there lives a notorious cannibal, with whom I had a little conversation. He pointed me to a pile of human bones in the fork of the orange tree under which we were sitting, and assured me that he had eaten the men of which each bone there was a representative, and that he had kept these bones as a memento of his cannibalism. Many other things did this inhuman wretch make known to me, and his countenance, and more than ordinary worn teeth, only helped to convince me that he had literally been a human bone-crusher! To have listened to this man's statements, and told, too, in the presence of those who could have contradicted them if false, would have removed forever, from the minds of some, the idea that Fijians are not lovers of human flesh. This vile cannibal affirmed that, as for eating, nothing was comparable to human flesh, not even fowls or pork. In different parts of this town we saw human bones hanging on the trees, which told of only very recent butchery. We made an arrangement that as soon as their teacher should arrive, all these bones should be collected and burned.

As the day was fast advancing we started back. On our return we took another road, if road it may be called. Here, at places, we had to go down hand over hand by the roots of the trees and vines, being literally perpendicular. After encountering a few more showers of rain, and walking through some of the clouds, we reached Navunidakua.

"ECCE HOMO."

PART I.

BY THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.

No anonymous book, since the "Vestiges of Creation" (now more than twenty years old) —indeed, it might almost be said no theological book, whether anonymous or of certified authorship — that has appeared within the same interval, has attracted anything like the amount of notice and of criticism which have been bestowed upon the remarkable volume entitled "Ecce Homo."

Probably we should have to travel much further back in order to find a work which having drawn forth commendations so warm, and censure so sharp, and both acquired the one and incurred the other from the most directly opposite quarters. The fact, however, is undisputed, and the instances familiar enough, and the phenomenon admits, perhaps, of some explanation only. On the one hand, it is plain that the author repeatedly uses language which could not consistently be employed in treating of Christianity from what is termed the orthodox point of view; and the offence which many have taken on this account has, in such cases unhappily, put a dead stop to any real investigation of the work in its general bearings. Or if the process has been continued, yet a determined adhesion to fixed and unelastic modes of thought has made it so repulsive, as to insure its ending in thorough-paced condemnation. On the other hand, what is loosely called society, and is represented by the literature, if not of the age, yet of the moment, has been making of late much of what may be termed proud flesh; a sign of ungoverned effort, and of life indeed, but of somewhat crude and disordered life. Into this tissue of proud flesh the work cuts, perhaps more deeply than any other production of recent years, not by direct insertion of the knife, but by bringing home to the reader's mind, with a wonderful force and freshness, this impression, that there is something or other called the gospel, which, whatever it be, as was said by an old poet of the divinity, has very strong, and what may even turn out to be very formidable, claims not merely on the intellectual condescension, but on the loyal allegiance and humble obedience of mankind. To drive home this impression to the heart and mind of the nineteenth century, now already grown elderly and growing old, disturbs the self-complacency of a mind determined upon comfort, and naturally enough constitutes a grave offence in the views of those to whom the chequered but still noble fabric of actual Christianity, still casting its majestic light and shadow over the whole civilized world, is a rank eyesore and an intolerable grievance.

This offence, serious in itself, is attended with aggravating circumstances. There is a tone of familiarity, to say the least, at the outset of the volume, and particularly in the preface, which naturally tends to raise hopes that the history of Him to whom so many lands, and so many ages, have bowed the knee, is to receive a very free handling. And, indeed, the author, it is observed, actually by implication calls himself a critic. He apparently proposes "to accept those conclusions about Christ, not which church doctors or even apostles have sealed with their authority, but which the facts themselves, critically weighed, appear to warrant." And yet this "critic," forsooth, we by-and-by discover, does not conform to the first law of theological criticism, which seems to be with many not far from this: that every question of history or creed, hitherto held affirmatively, and now admitted to examination, is to be determined in the negative. Or more pointedly, he does not conform to the canon which Dr. Strauss lays down as a postulate, if not an axiom, in his "Life of Christ composed for the German people,"† where we have the following proposition: "A personality, which on one side indeed is of a man, but on the other a being of higher order, a God or Son of God, and which, though born of a human mother, is begotten of no human father, such an object we hand over to fable and to poetry, but never think of making it the theme of a serious historical treatment." This staggering proposition our author does not adopt; nay, he believes in miracles, or at least has registered no vow to disbelieve them. Now this seems like taking the shibboleth of a party, and then turning out no better than a traitor in the camp. In fine, to the absolutely stereotyped forms both of faith and scepticism, to the "high and dry" believer, and to the "high and dry" non-believer, the author of "Ecce Homo" has been a most unacceptable visitant, for apparently he has caused to both a good deal of vague perturbation. This, however, as has been said, but in partial explanation, especially as regards the objector on the side of orthodoxy. To him in particular this volume, quite apart from those occasional offences (as we will call them) of language that have already been mentioned, does a most serious challenge. Undoubtedly it exhibits the character of our Lord on the human side. It reports to show, and it actually does, Him as a man; and it leaves us to see, through the fair curtain of his manhood, what we may. The objection taken to this mode of treatment, in substance, perhaps amounts to this—that our Saviour is mere man, but is God made man; and that he ought not to be treated in any Christian work as man only, but as God and man. In justice compels us to add that those who challenge the author of "Ecce Homo" on this ground, are not always persons whose judgment can be summarily put aside on the score of bigotry and blindness.

As to the matter of fact, the single question, namely, whether the writer exhibits our Saviour as man, let the objector, at any rate for argument's sake, have his way: it is plain that, to say the least, human aspect so predominates in this volume as to be at first sight almost the only one. But on the lights of the case, as distinguished from the bare matter of fact, more is much to be said. It is very difficult, it is, humanly speaking, almost impossible, to maintain a just balance, together with close union, between two ideas of such immense disparity as God and man: the wailing infant and the supreme Creator: the Victim of death and the Lord of Death: the deed of sin and the judge of all. Heresy from an early date, cut the heart of this difficulty by denying the divinity of Christ. The Christian church, with its force undivided, its attention concentrated on subjects of controversy which were as conspicuously few as they were profoundly vital, did indeed make good for itself a clear and solid theological standing-ground, strict correspondence with the terms of an Emmanuel, or God with us. But the student of ecclesiastical history, or even the mere curory inspector of the records of a few of the councils of the fourth century, knows that it was not until after many fearful, and even what to human eyes might seem many a giddy reel, at nearly unanimous Christendom settled down upon a centre of gravity in doctrinal expression, which has been perfectly stable through all the vicissitudes of fifteen hundred years, and which to all appearance nothing can now shake, except there come a shock under which definite Christianity shall crumble. This combined belief in the deity and humanity of Christ has survived the impact and strain of all those convulsive forces which rent it from West, or as the Eastern Christians would, with more show of reason, say, West from East; which then broke off from the great Western mass so many integral parts of its articulated structure, and which have profoundly organized so much even of what they did not actually sever. Yet it is very difficult for the subjective christianity of individuals, or even for systems, to maintain with precision the equilibrium which has been so laboriously won for its keepers by the action of the early church. In the Roman communion it is long seemed to observers from without, as if much of what belongs to the humanity of Christ in the first forms of Christian belief, and according to the common creeds, were virtually intercepted by devotion primarily addressed to immediate objects, and too often apt to rest there. In England, and, as some think, still more in Scotland there is, on the other hand a tendency among imperfectly informed Christians practically to merge the humanity in the divinity of our Lord, to undervalue or overlook its continued existence and action, in some cases even to suppose that it terminated with the theophany, or manifestation of the Divine person in the flesh.

If this be so, how, perhaps, on the part of a book like "Ecce Homo," it may be right to retort a friendly expostulation, and to entreat objectors to consider with themselves whether their impression of a detailed picture of our Lord in his humanity is really so unequivocal a sign of orthodoxy as they suppose; or whether, on the contrary, it may rather be a token that the religious mind among us has, from want of habitual cultivation, grown dry and irreceptive on that side of the Christian creed, so that the kind of writing which they encounter with rebuke and suspicion is the very kind which needed to bring us back to the full vigor of that mixed conception of the character and person of our Lord, which in reality forms, according to the acknowledgment of nearly all communions of the Christian name, the central idea of the Christian system.

It may, however, be further said, and it may even be true, that the author of "Ecce Homo" does not throughout handle the subject of our Saviour's humanity with the care and caution of language which would be observed, and ought to be observed, by a sound believer, not to say by a trained theologian. And this form of the indictment brings us at length near, by the reply which it suggests, to that which, speaking without any special information, and merely using the materials of judgment which the work supplies, we should take to be the true position of the writer, and the legitimate office of the work.

In his brief preface the author of "Ecce Homo" has informed us that he wrote it for the satisfaction of his own mind. The work then was the work of one who felt his way, and made his road as he went along; it was a tentative work, and a tentative work can ill afford to be judged by the rules applicable to one which is didactic. The didactic writer is in possession when he begins of all the knowledge with which he ends; the tentative writer gathers as he goes. The first is bound by the same rules all along; the other enlarges the scope of his vision at each step he makes, and may naturally and justifiably have employed language and assumed a tone when he commenced his labors which would be unbecoming from the more advanced position that he occupies at the close. Nor ought he of necessity to go back upon and recast his diction, so as to give himself one color and one attitude from first to last; for if he did so he would be likely to efface from his composition those lineaments of truth and nature on which its effect as a whole might in great measure depend. For in such a work, which is essentially a work of self-education, that which, above all things, the reader ought to see is the progression of effect, which the study of the subject, exhibited in the composition of the book, has had upon the mind of the writer. He should be placed in a position to measure with some accuracy the distance between his author's point of departure and point of arrival; and, in order that he may do this, he must know the actual whereabout of the one as well as the other. Now the very language by which the author of "Ecce Homo" has, it may be, pained or startled the minds of numerous readers, may perhaps be no more than a true index of the unformed but upright state of mind in which he addressed himself to a subject never, it would seem, effectually brought home to his understanding through those channels of tradition and authority which with most of us have been the earliest, and with some, it may be feared, the only avenues of access for the Christian religion to our intellects as well as to our hearts.

A FAITHFUL FRIEND.

About a year since a young man, known to the writer, went into a certain office on an errand of business. As he was about leaving the proprietor said to him: "My young friend, are you a Christian?" He replied: "I regret to say that I am not." That faithful friend then kindly urged him to seek Christ at once, to delay no longer securing the pearl of great price. The young man thanked him politely, and said he would "think of it."

In three weeks his widow called at the same office to bring his dying message. Said she: "He thought much of your kind advice, and resolved to seek religion. He was suddenly taken sick. After a few days he found sweet peace in believing, became entirely resigned to the Divine will, and died in the triumphs of faith.

"Tell my friend N.," said he, 'that I thank him with my dying breath for his faithfulness to my soul. His words led me to think seriously of my eternal interests, to give my heart to Jesus, and to prepare for this dying hour."

To his father, who like too many professing Christians had been remiss in his religious duties, he said, "Don't neglect the other children as you have neglected me. Lead them to Jesus before it is too late."

Brethren, laborers in the vineyard of Christ, what encouragement you have to speak a word, "in season, out of season," to those around you! Be faithful. "Run, speak to that young man." It may be the means of saving his soul.—Times.

From Good Words.

THE TURN OF THE YEAR.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

I.

A gentle wind of western birth,
From some far summer sea,
Wakes daisies in the wintry earth,
Wakes thoughts of hope in me.

The sun is low; the paths are wet,
And dance with frolic hail;
The trees, whose spring-time is not yet,
Swing sighing in the gale.

Young gleams of sunshine peep and play;
Thick vapors crowd between;
'Tis strange that on a coming day
The earth will all be green.

The north wind blows and blasts and flays;
And flaps his snowy wing:
Back! toss thy bergs on arctic seas,
Thou canst not stay our spring.

II.

Up comes the primrose, wondering;
The snowdrop droopeth by;
The holy spirit of the spring
Is working silently.

Sweet-breathing odors gently wile
Earth's other children out;
On nature's face a hopeful smile
Is flickering about.

When earth lay hard, unlovely, dull,
And life within her slept,
Above her heaven grew beautiful,
And forth her beauty crept;

And though tears fall, as fall they will,
Smiles wander into sighs,
Yet if the sun keep shining still
Her perfect day will rise.

III.

The sky is smiling over me,
Hath smiled away the frost,
Clothed with young green the patient lea,
With buds the wood embossed.

The trees yet shut not out the sky,
It sees down to the flowers;
They lift their beauty fearlessly,
They hide in leafy bowers.

This day is yours, sweet birds; sing on;
The cold is all forgot;
Ye had a dream, but it is gone:
Pain that is past, is not.

Joy that was past is come again;
And if the summer brings
New care, it is a loving pain,
That broods instead of stings.

IV.

Blow on me, wind, from west and south;
Sweet summer-spirit, blow!
Come like a kiss from dear child's mouth,
Who knows not what I know.

The earth's perfection cometh soon;
Ours lingereth alway;
We have a spring-time, have a moon,
No sunny summer day.

Rose-sprinkled eve, gold-branded morn,
May still poor Nature's sighs;
To us a higher hope is born—
We rest in that we rise.

But at the last a sapphire day
All over us will bow;
And man's heart, full of sunlight, say,
"Lord, 'tis thy summer now."

TRIALS OF AN ITINERANT.

Mr. Editor: I have passed through the toils and cares of the Conference year.

I have spent $842 in supporting my family and moving from a former circuit to this one.

I have received $207 50 in all—corn, fodder, peas, potatoes, etc.

I owe $93 62 for rent of my house, and $30 to a friend for his kindness. I have sold my house—my all of earthly property—and owe a brother $84 for bacon and lard.

I went to-day to see Rev. Mr. ——, to whom I am indebted for rent of house; told him all; offered him over $200 worth of notes as collateral security. He declined, saying: "I must have my money."

After my interview with him I came home—no, here—and sat down with a sad heart—full, sorrowful, weeping. My wife sent me a loaf of bread, (corn bread,) saying that that was all she had. I hastened off to a grocer and sold him a table for a piece of cheese.

As I returned, while walking hurriedly down the street, I began to be sorry that ever God called me to preach. "Here I am; once in prosperous circumstances, having enough of earthly goods to make me easy and happy. I sought and obtained the hand of her whom I almost worshiped. For ten years we have been happy. Our sunshine has never been darkened—though frequently a cloud has passed over us—till now. Now, alas! What is this I feel in my heart? Why is it? Ah! sorrow and hunger. Here is one whom I took from the embrace of a mother, from the comforts of a luxurious home, to—alas! to what? To punish!—Death, hast thou forgotten that I am still in the world? 'Father, thy will, not mine, be done.'"

Such were my thoughts when, as out of sleep, I awoke from my dream, and caught the sound of music. It was unusually sweet, but I knew the voice. My wife! What could I do but thank God that He had thrown such an angel in my path? I did. I felt happy, but now I am sad again. Two days more and I am to start to a strange place, one hundred and fifty miles distant, with forty-seven dollars. Shall I be attached? and if so, what shall I do? My dear brethren (God pity them!) owe me three times as much as I owe. And I cannot get it. I must wait. My creditors won't. The stewards are at fault.

Your's in suffering, E. O.

The Uncorrupted Preservation of the Scriptures.—No. IV.

Having adduced, as we think, sufficient evidence of the antiquity of the Scriptures, the next point to settle is this: have we the same books and are their contents the same? Have they undergone no material change? When we consult the most ancient and respectable authorities outside of the Bible we find that the catalogue contained in their writings are the same that now constitute our Scriptures.

The catalogue of the Old Testament books by Josephus—the Septuagint translation and the Samaritan Pentateuch—are just the same books that constitute our present list. For the New Testament, beside the quotations from all the books that make up the volume, catalogues of authentic scriptures were published at early periods, which, says Dr. Paley, "though numerous and made in different countries, at a wide distance from one another, differ very little, differ in nothing material, and all contain the four gospels."

In the writings of Origen which remain, and in some extracts preserved by Eusbius from works which are now lost, there are enumerations of the books of the Scripture, in which the four gospels and the Acts of the Apostles are distiuctly and honorably named, and in which no books appear beside those now received as inspired. Origen wrote about A. D. 230. Athanasius, about a century later, gives us a catalogue containing the present books, with none others, and says: "In these books alone the doctrine of religion is taught. Let no man add to them or take anything from them." About twenty years after Athanasius, Cyril, bishop of Jerusalem, set forth a catalogue of the book of the Scripture publicly read at that time in the church at Jerusalem, exactly the same as ours, with the exception of the omission of the Revelations. Fifteen years after Cyril the council of Laodicea give us a catalogue of the sacred books, just the same as Cyril's.

Catalogues of the inspired books now became frequent. From the year A. D. 363 to the conclusion of the fourth century we have catalogues by Epiphanius, by Gregory Nazianzen, Philastes, bishop of Brescia, in Italy, by Amphilochius, bishop of Iconium, all clear — that is, without any intermixture of other books with those now received. After this time catalogues of the books of the Old and New Testament, as we now have them, are so numerous that it is not necessary to make further quotations.

Let us now proceed to examine whether the contents, as well as the books, are the same now that they originally were. First, then, in regard to the Old Testament scriptures. Before the advent of Christ the regard which was paid to them by the Jews, especially to the law, would render any forgery or material change in their contents impossible. The law was the deed to the land of Canaan, by which it was divided among the tribes. It is not likely that the people who possessed this land would permit the book containing the title and the boundaries to be falsified. The division of the land into twelve tribes or states would make the people more jealous of their several rights, and any change of the book more difficult. At certain seasons the book was publicly read before all the people. It was appointed to be kept in the Ark of the Covenant. Their king was required to write him a copy of this law, out of the copy kept by the priests, and to read this all the days of his life. The priests were commanded to teach these books to the children of Israel. Parents were charged to narrate all these matters diligently to their children. Added to this a severe prohibition was annexed to making any addition to or any diminution from the law. We submit, no such precepts as these could have been given by an impostor who was himself adding to the contents of the book, and who would wish men to forget rather than enjoin them to remember the law. The priest had to have copies to teach the people; the king had to have a copy to read all the days of his life; the people had to have copies to teach their children. When the Jews were divided into the kingdoms of Israel and Judeah, each had their copies of the same book, and one could not change it without the notice and certain exposure of the other. After this rival sects sprung up: the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes. These each had their peculiar interpretations of the inspired book, but it was impossible to change a line or word to prove their views without instant detection and disgraceful exposure. The ancient Jews were so careful of the preservation of the Scriptures that they counted all the books, all the sections, all the paragraphs, all the words, and even the letters, so that even the slightest change was impossible. Immediate exposure would have been the result. Since the establishment of Christianity, Jews and Christians have possessed and held in equal veneration the Old Testament, and if for any reason either had wished to change the original record, neither could have done so without detection and exposure.

Equally satisfactory is the evidence of the uncorrupted preservation of the New Testament scriptures. 1. From their contents; for so early as the first two centuries of the Christian era we find the very same facts and the very same doctrines universally received by the Christians, which we of the present day believe on the credit of the New Testament. 2. Because a universal corruption of those writings was for various reasons impossible; nor is there the least vestige of such a corruption to be found in history. It is manifest that no one would have dared to corrupt these writings during the life-time of their authors, and before their deaths numerous copies were scattered abroad among the different communities of Christians. Within twenty years after the ascension churches were established in nearly all the provinces of the Roman world. To all these the books of the New Testament were read and taught as containing the history and doctrines, morals, and hopes of the gospel. After this numerous copies and translations were made, and from these, as we have shown in a former article quotations were so numerous that if by any possibility the New Testament should be lost, the entire book could be recovered and reconstructed.

There are numerous ancient manuscripts in the Greek, Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Coptic languages. Some of these manuscripts are from one thousand to fifteen hundred years old, and have been preserved with the utmost care for many centuries. When these manuscripts are compared there is found to be no discrepancy or alteration that impairs the integrity of one fact, doctrine or precept. It is true there are what are called various readings, growing out of the possible mistakes or carelessness of the copyist, but these, though numerous, are unimportant, affecting, as we have said, no fact, doctrine or precept. We all know that for many centuries past no one of the numerous branches of the church could have changed any passage to sustain their peculiar tenets without instant and disgraceful exposure. We conclude, then, that we have the Scriptures without any change worthy of notice—just as the inspired writers originally gave them to the world. W.

MINISTERIAL SUPPORT.

* * * * * *

It is the poorest policy in the world to get preaching on the cheap plan. The man who is poorly paid will preach with less heart and power, will do his pastoral duties with less relish, and hence with less acceptance and profit, will build up the congregation with less rapidity and certainty than if he had been compensated in a remunerating way. He feels wronged and hurt; he is pained and annoyed. He is preaching that men ought not to owe any man anything, and is in debt habitually. He is preaching charity, and only gives a penny by taking it from the hand of his child. He is advocating liberality and generosity, and has nothing to give in proof of his faith in what he preaches. He is goaded constantly to do what he cannot do, and it wears the spirit out of him. Think of a bill brought to the minister some Friday morning, when he is seated at his next Sabbath's sermon, which he is unable to pay! Why it would drive all theology,—certainly all of homiletics—out of his head, and insure for the congregation a heartless discourse. No man can think, no man can write, no man can long live in such an excruciating condition.

And this is just the time to think of these matters; and, to think of them, too, in surrounding light. It does not do to grow restive under so many appeals and suggestions. It is all done, good friends, in your own interests. Pay for it and get it and the blessing, or refuse and do without, and receive the condemnation. Do not begin to talk about the three and five hundred a year of half a century or more ago. That is all past. "Let the dead past bury its dead." We cannot dig up the linsey woolsey dresses and heavy sleeves any more than we can the cheap gospel. We cannot exhume the carpetless floors, the curtainless windows, the oak table, and old benches and chairs, the primitive habits and styles, any more than we can bury our mahogany, and mohair, and silk, and broadcloth, and linen, and furs, and a thousand other things, out of our sight. We need not try to dig up the cattle of 1800, and sell their beef at three cents per pound, nor will it be worth while to try to winnow the dust of half a century to get flour at two dollars per barrel. These conventions and meetings of boards, and religious societies and associations are not to be discontinued in deference to the memories of days when a meeting every year was considered an extravagance of frequency.

Let those old affairs remain as completely in oblivion as the sites of the log cabins are invisible and forgotten. And when you go to make arrangements for gospel support, make an estimate of the spirit and requirements of the age in which you live. If you are not willing to pay more for brains than muscle, still be considerate enough to be just in a humane and brotherly way. Make up your mind from a study of the price of gold, of wheat, of beef, corn, and all the articles of ordinary use in life. If not stimulated by the consideration of the worth of educated labor, be animated by a careful study of business rates, as printed in any good newspaper.

We suppose some good people get restive under the vexation of having their attention called to this matter so frequently. But why? It is a matter of great importance. It belongs to the morality of our religion. Recollect all the blessings of civilization, for which we have reason to be thankful, are secured to us by the gospel of Christ, and this gospel is only propagated and maintained by being preached and administered by the officers of the church. We have many luxuries and blessings the heathen know nothing of: the gospel is the cause. Recollect, above all, the spiritual and eternal blessings secured by the preaching of the gospel.

Why, then, not be willing to pay liberally for that which makes such munificent return? Just let the church go down in your communities, and you will have no security for anything. Your children are exposed to earthly and eternal ruin. Your homes and all your possessions are threatened with the violence of knaves and outlaws. You are arranging for a chaos of infamy and outrage, when you are gone, to involve your descendants in guilt for which you will be responsible, and you are periling your own and the spiritual interests of all around and who may follow you.

We would say more, did our space permit. Think of these things, and pray for light and direction.

LETTER FROM BISHOP McTYEIRE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Jan. 11, 1868.

Mr. Editor: I reached home on the last day, in the evening, of the last year, and found all alive, safe, and well. Laus Deo. Quite a change from your mild and bountiful country and climate—I found the snow a foot deep. There I could hardly keep my coat on, and here I can hardly take it off.

To-day I had the pleasure of meeting with the Board of Domestic Missions, and of bringing the matter of the Discipline in German before them. The Board very heartily entered into it, and made an appropriation to start the Book Agent to work on it immediately. We have a translation, prepared by one of our German ministers, a scholarly man. The Book Agent promises to have the Discipline of the M. E. Church, South, in the German language, printed, bound, and ready for sale in two months, or less time. One thousand copies only will be published now. You at Galveston, and Bro. Harp in New Orleans, will have the main distribution of the edition. It will be put at cost. Our German brethren have long and much needed this manual of our doctrines, government, and ritual in their own language, and you will please, in your own way, give them information that it is "a preparing," and will soon be ready. I trust they will have the small edition spoken for, and take it up at once.

How comes on the German paper? Has your Publishing Committee transferred the type, etc., to New Orleans? From Brother Ahrens, editor, I look for an excellent German Christian Advocate. And may it not stop or suspend ever, as did its worthy predecessor, but develop into a great and pervading organ for that interesting membership that cleaves to us so faithfully and works so systematically. The Germans are destined to become a power in Texas, and one of the best powers in church and State. I was not aware, until recently, of the strength and excellent condition of our German mission. I think the American brethren learned some useful lessons from them at the late session of Conference. Let them attend to the schedule of duty as faithfully, minutely, and systematically as do the German brethren, and great would be the increase.

While my pen is in, let me add that the Board appropriated to the Auxiliary Boards of the Texas, Northwest Texas, West Texas, and Trinity Conferences, which made application, the amounts for domestic missions due severally from them. I trust they will be able to increase these appropriations, but have my fears. Tell your brethren to work as though there were none to help them but the Lord. By gathering up patiently and carefully, and in time, the many littles which there many peoples will give for missions, and sending in the amounts to the respective treasurers of the Conference Domestic Boards, all their drafts may be met, and those true and hard-working evangelists, who have gone forth depending on them, will not be left to suffer. The Parent Board appreciates your position and your wants, but times are hard all round the house, and not a few think they are easier in Texas than elsewhere.

Allow me to congratulate your readers on the excellent appearance and contents of the paper you are giving them. Set me down for one of your "occasionals."

Bro. J. W. Downs, of Waco, has just given me cheering news. Bro. Stanford's ministry has opened well. The Lord has visited his people; many have been converted and added to the church in Waco. With what interest will I, week after week, open the Texas Christian Advocate to see how the work goes on, and how the pleasure of the Lord prospers in the hands of His servants.

Yours truly,

H. N. McTYEIRE.

The Origin of Vegetables and Fruits.

In the preparation of the following facts relating to the origin of various popular vegetables, grains and fruits, we have met with perplexing difficulties, arising from a conflict of authorities, which have cost us much time and research. We have taken counsel chiefly from and always deferred to the New American Cyclopedia.

To Africa, of all foreign climes, we owe our first grateful vegetarian nod. Beans, formerly the Sunday dish, and still a favorite all over New England, although originating in Persia, were cultivated first within sight of embryo mummies in the land of the Sphynx. Who ever dreams, while enjoying his "Bartlett," his "Flemish Beauty," or his "Seckel," that the first pear blossoms opened, also, in sight of the Pyramids? And the onion—that healthiest of all garden vegetables—we had hoped that in poetic justice research would prove this pathetic bulb to have sprung from the land of Niobe, but no, Egypt again stretches forth her withered hand and claims the onion as her own! And from our present data it appears that her claims upon the date, most valuable to her and surrounding countries, are antedated by none. So, likewise, of the peanut, the pocket-companion of Greeley, and many a "smaller fry." From Abyssinia the oat has spread over the world; from Ethiopia came that most delicate and widely cultivated of all cereals, rice; and last and least, the egg-plant first laid its glossy treasures under the African sun.

Asia must possess considerable native acidity, in soil or climate, for she gave the world the cherry, the lemon and rhubarb, while she has a claim equal with the rest of the world upon the barberry, and yet, without Asia, the world would not be "worth a fig," for there that delicious fruit originated; as, also, did buckwheat.

To Persia we stand indebted for peaches (where they still grow in a native state, small, bitter, and with poisonous qualities,) walnuts, mulberries, and a score of every day luxuries and necessities; and to her, also, jointly with Greece and Asia Minor, for the queen of fruits, the grape.

Siberia—cold, unsocial land—should not be cursed for the gift of rye, really one of the sweetest and most wholesome grains. She did not accompany the gift with a still, nor dream of the sadly perverted use it has been subjected to by modern avarice and appetite. Siberia, too, is believed to have blessed the world with that choicest of cereal gifts, wheat, which possesses more qualities combined to render it suitable and salubrious for food than any other edible grain; while, according to the best authorities, from the Siberian crab was developed the present glorious "apple of our eye."

China, too, deserves no mean recognition. Here tea was first steeped, and from here and Japan the world still gets its supply. Here the orange blossom first shed its rich perfume upon the air and matured its luscious, golden fruit; and to China, through her sugar cane and her art of making sugar from it, the world is also indebted for its chief sweetening.

The plum stone was first sucked by the Russian bear; the cranberry springs up spontaneously in the swamps of all countries; the currant first became current in Sweden and the north of England; and the blackberry, raspberry, strawberry and whortleberry, (the huckleberry and blueberry being here included,) are indigenous to America and Europe alike. Cabbage first wilted under the eye of the Dutch, or among the cliffs and rocks of England, where it still grows wild, but without any appearance of a head; the turnip and parsnip first took root in English soil; the carrot in the north, and the beet, artichoke, and horseradish in the south of Europe. Parsley, that prettiest of all pretty greens, and which takes most natural to our American soil, originated in Sardinia; to Arabia we owe the cultivation of spinach, and all ye pickle-eaters should bow in gratitude to the East Indies for cucumbers. The cocoa-nut probably, also, originated in the East Indies. The fragrant, saucey quince came from the south of Europe; the bread fruit originated in the eastern Archipelago. Authorities are not decided whether the chestnut, dear to squirrels and young America, first dropped its burrs upon American or Italian soil. The butternut is wholly American, so too—heaven save the mark—is tobacco. And though England and Ireland may bawl over "corn" and "praties" till they are hoarse, they too belong to America. Of barley, second in importance among the cereals, and which of all our grains has the greatest range of cultivation and which matures in almost every climate of the world, its origin and use go back beyond the calculations of history.

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars; with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

TO OUR CITY FRIENDS.

We believe there are hundreds of persons in this city who would gladly welcome the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to their households if its claims could be brought specially to their notice. We ask the attention of our friends to this matter, and earnestly invite their co-operation. It is an advocate of evangelical truth, opposed to vice in all its forms, and to radicalism in all its phases, whether it be in the guise of a bishop seizing churches by military order, or, as assembled in convention, a mass of whites and blacks attempting to make a "constitution."

Though circulating throughout the Southwest considerably more than any other paper, it has a limited subscription in this city. It has never yet found diligent, earnest friends who were able and ready to canvass the thousands of people here that wish for just such a family newspaper as the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

We deliver the paper at the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE office, No. 112 Camp street, on every Saturday; at the post office, at the Felicity and Carondelet street churches, or anywhere in the business part of town, without additional charge for the carrier. Subscription price $3 per annum in advance.

The paper is published at a price below its actual cost, that general religious information may be diffused among the people, and that our churches in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama may have the aid of a common medium of intelligence to recover themselves from their disorganized condition incident to the war, that they may be better prepared to meet the unprincipled policy of various Northern missionary elements that are busy among us with the avowed purpose of disintegrating Southern churches.

One liberal-hearted Southern Methodist did, last year, send us a letter from the Northwest containing $50, to be expended in sending the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to widows and poor persons. We expect such things from our own people in sustaining this organ of the Southern Methodist Church in the Southwest. We have one test of a Methodist: does he take the Christian Advocate?

THE MISSIONARY NIGHT-VISION.

Saul of Tarsus had three remarkable visions: in one he saw a man named Ananias coming in and putting his hand on him that he might receive his sight; in another he was translated mysteriously, it may be bodily, to the highest heaven; and the third appeared while he was at Troas, on the eastern shore of the Aegean sea. At night he saw a man before him clothed in the costume, or it may be in the invincible armor of the swift-moving Macedonian! As much zeal as the apostle had in spreading the gospel, the Spirit was in advance of him; standing, as it were, upon the heights of Mount Athos, it beckoned him on. We suppose that on a clear day Paul might have stood on Ida and seen Athos without a vision, but would scarcely have thought of going thither, while as yet so much of Greece and Italy was unexplored. However he was the man to avail himself promptly of every providence of God. He immediately changed his original purpose and "came with a straight course" to Samothracia, an island near the western coast; thence he went to Neapolis, on the main land; and from thence to the principal city, Philippi, the very heart of Macedonia. This whole movement, like an arrow to its mark, shows the missionary fire which burned in the apostle. We accept him as the type of the Christian missionary.

It has become a momentous question whether missionary enterprise enters properly into the organic structure of the church; whether it is part of the ordinary duty of a Christian, or is merely an open field for the development of a high order of spiritual enterprise; whether it is a matter that fastens on the conscience as an absolute duty, or appears as a luxury within the reach of all who wish to reap "an hundred fold in the life to come." Let a man settle this advisedly and conscientiously, that he may know what weight should be allowed the missionary movement in his own calculations and arrangements for the year. Does he acknowledge himself to be held to any obligation to distribute the gospel to any people but his own? To determine this correctly is to decide the whole question, whether this matter of sending men to China to preach the gospel lies on the surface of a godly life or enters into it deeply, as an integral part of the new man.

We think that it is felt at the earliest moment of the new life: that the consciousness of Christ's love for us, and of our interest in his death, is accompanied by a longing to spread the glad truth—"come rejoice with me, for I have found that which I had lost." To share this glorious light with all is not an impulse, but a law implanted in us at that moment, because it is a part of "that Light which lighteneth every man that cometh into the world."

This deep-seated obligation, which becomes more inflxed as our spiritual consciousness deepens, is in marked contrast with the shallow, occasional, accidental, and merely spasmodic agencies which are at work in its discharge. Once a year this life-duty comes seriously before us, and the fate of a mission is made to depend upon the success of a speech. As if there were no real life in the movement for the conversion of the world, all galvanic processes, not absolutely sinful, are invoked to sustain the cause in the minds of the audience for one brief hour. This work of a life, of a long life, of the church, of every apostle, and of the Saviour himself, the last solemn charge of the Lord sublime in his risen manhood, is thus made to pass in swift review, and is then practically dismissed to make way for other duties. The first breathing of the New Testament prayer, "Thy kingdom come," and the first breath of the new-found life are habitually repressed.

It seems to us that it is high time to awaken, that we may lay the foundations of missionary enterprise over again, and place them in the economic arrangements of the church, where God has placed them, in the consciences of the converted; that is, at the bottom of the structure. Many of us must reach heaven, if at all, by the way of China. Live for the ignorant and the unenlightened of earth is the wide, grand employment in which the richest graces of the Spirit are to be cultivated in our own hearts.

We all to see night-visions of a man standing on the farther Aegean shore, or in the heights of Athos, calling, beckoning, commanding us to move swiftly toward the salvation of the world.

As for our church, let her remember that the atmosphere which she breathes is not of her own making. All her glory and peace she has inherited from the labors of other men. Their missionary spirit planted the seeds of which she now reaps the harvest. If she would be blessed of succeeding generations, let her arise in the unquenchable zeal of a flaming angel and carry this news of life to the four hundred millions of the East, or prepare to see the fires go out upon her altars at home. Let her pledge the first sheaf, and not the last, for the support of her missionaries: provide for their maintenance, that the Lord of every harvest may pour a richer, fuller measure into her generous bosom.

THE BUREAU ORDER.

The recent order promising aid to the planter in the shape of a loan will be found in this number of the ADVOCATE. The whole appropriation for the State of Louisiana is stated to be $250,000. This will go a little ways among the thousands who need advances. Whether the planter could be really advantaged by accepting the offer is questionable. It revives the last effort of the Egyptians in the days of Pharaoh, when they parted with their lands, their farming utensils, and their cattle to the agent of the government. "And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh: for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them; so the land became Pharaoh's." We do hope that no stress and no apparent advance in cotton will lead our people to risk anything farther. They cannot afford to go upon uncertainties; no, not another day. If they base calculations upon government aid, upon obtaining advances, upon the labor of the freedman, or upon an improved market, they run a great hazard of losing their last cent. They can cultivate a forty acre field and raise food for a family; they can have a few cows, and pigs, and work, with their own sons, fields already cleared, and afford, may be, to hire one colored man in addition; and it is just that which they should do. By this course they will outride this storm, and keep possession of lands that have an intrinsic value in the market of the world, not to be destroyed by the mad legislation of Congress. When the mills of New England are stopped, and the rocky sides of the Connecticut refuse to supply her unemployed operatives with food, these fertile deltas, made richer by every spring-flood, will be sought for as the only sure mine of exhaustless wealth. Our people must not seek relief from their present troubles, great as they are, by the wholesale sacrifice of the grandest inheritance of soil and climate that can belong to the lot of man.

To go back to the self-supporting and all-producing policy of the war period is the true policy of the South. Use nothing that you do not raise or make, or that your neighbor does not; live entirely within yourselves; dress in home-made cotton and woolens; tan your own leather, make your own shoes, raise your own horses and mules, and especially your own cows. The price of butter in the city and throughout the southwest tells the whole story of our extravagance of calculation and want of thrift. The finest dairy country in the world is within six hour's run by rail and boat of New Orleans; yet butter of ordinary quality, which could not be sold at all for the table either in Baltimore or Philadelphia, here commands 60 to 65 cents per pound. Yet our farmers wonder how they can live.

The fruits of the South greatly surpass those of New Jersey in delicacy of flavor, and would soon drive all Northern can-fruits out of the market if offered at the same price. Vegetables ripen here nearly two months in advance of the New York gardens, and could be brought into competition with the later products of that region to great advantage. The gardeners about Norfolk, Virginia, have already commanded the entire trade in early potatoes, corn, tomatoes, and peas, in the large cities of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Ohio. Lands which were scarcely worth buying ten years ago in the neck of Virginia are now worth a hundred dollars an acre—an improved value springing entirely from the mildness of its climate, and the facilities of steam and rail communication.

Unless this idea that we must live by cotton or die can be gotten rid of, our planters will indeed perish agriculturally and financially. Leave cotton to the government and the negroes. The negroes belong to the government—as it is now "run"—and the government alone can afford to feed them and work them. Let Messrs. Sumner, Butler and Banks lay out huge farms, and put all the negroes upon them to raise cotton and to vote. No man can safely venture to work a negro or a cotton field, these days, who expects or wishes to live without stealing. To this it has at last come. The ownership of the negro has passed out of the hands of individuals into that of the general government; he must be fed and controlled by the hand that feeds him, or he will starve himself and everybody else. And we suppose, from its limited amount, that this Bureau appropriation is really intended as an entering wedge to the experiment of Bureau farms, pet farms for working, holding, feeding, and voting the enfranchised freedmen, until after the election of Mr. Stanton to the Presidency. If the Radical party chooses to advance money for the benefit of the negro, so be it. The negro will eat all up that is advanced; that is quite certain. But we object to the Southern planter's being mixed up with the arrangement; for so surely as he is, the government and the negro together will consume him.

THE GRETNA RESOUE.

Where shall the balance come from that is necessary to the saving of this church from the sheriff—some $700? An interesting question. A gentleman who is not a member of our church sends word that he will give $50 toward making up the deficiency. Who else will come to the resoue, and aid the Southern Methodist ladies in their noble efforts to preserve this church to the Protestants of Gretna?

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOTES Illustrative of the Meaning and Application of the Figures Employed by St. John, the Divine, in the Revelation of Jesus Christ, by Rev. James P. Gardner. Nashville, Tenn. Published by A. H. Redford, agent, for the author. 1867. 12mo.

The peculiar view of the author is that the ideas of this prophecy are first sketched, and then gradually deepened and finished. He thus gets rid of the chronology of the book. In other points this treatise follows the method of Newton's Commentary. Every beam of light thrown upon this great prophetic problem should be received gratefully. Apocalyptic literature is already voluminous, and there is scarcely a stray thought upon the Revelation of St John that has not been developed and elaborated into a well-written volume. We therefore advise every one who intends writing upon this great theme—and most every preacher has some such intention—to spend one quarter the cost of publishing a work in purchasing fifty volumes of commentaries on the apocalypse, from England, and may be it will save him any further expense. This volume is very neatly gotten up. Its press work and typography are highly creditable to our Publishing House.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Democratic Central Committee has issued a temperate and eloquent address, calling upon all truly patriotic citizens of every party to unite promptly in organizing for the purpose of sustaining the conservative party of the North in the great autumnal conflict for the preservation of the Constitution. We give an extract from it:

"Much might be expected from the calming of the war passions, under the soothing influences of time, the returning sense of justice, and a reawakened feeling of brotherhood; but it is no purpose of reproach in saying, and a great encouragement to know, that the wrongs inflicted upon us have come to be recognized and felt as wrongs done to the whole country; and that, in the prostration of our rights and liberties, a blow is struck, which vibrates through the whole framework of American governments, and startles men everywhere with alarm for themselves.

"Our cause is felt to be the cause of constitutional liberty. Our escape from the abject servitude and desolation to which the policy of radicalism would condemn us in our own land will be the rescue from destruction of all cherished forms and muniments which our fathers, who built up this government for us, thought and meant to be strong enough to preserve it for their posterity and mankind.

"The work and heat of this great constitutional struggle is to be borne at the North. There freedom of speech, and the rights of lawful suffrage, are not yet arrested by the military dictatorship; and men have yet the privilege of voting against the oppressions they feel. The power is with them—the consequences of failure, although disheartening and full of gloom for a political and financial future, will be vastly less in the present to them than to us, who will be helplessly bound victims to a cruel experiment. To us it is a matter of life and death. Success will be to them a security from evils against which they might, even if they had failed, have hoped at some future day of relief. But to us, for them to fail is the consummation of ruin—a starless future of impenetrable gloom.

"But, although the peril is great, all is not lost. The heart of the people has been touched and their eyes have been opened. The rushing sounds of great multitudes rising to the rescue of the country from the hands of the spoilers comes from all quarters. All round the horizon there is a lightning of clouds, as though the hour of deliverance was at hand. Unmistakable sounds of indignation and warning speak out loudly, whenever the voices of the people could be heard in elections. Above all, and most encouraging is it, that men of all shades of political opinion on subjects of government administration, however known by different names and separated by old strifes, alarmed for the safety of the country, are coming together into one organization, which extends to the utmost limits of the republic. The vital element of concord among them is devotion to the one purpose of establishing, by a grand effort at the polls, the fundamental truth—without which American institutions are but a fleeting phantasm—that written constitutions make a sacred and inviolable bond; not, as the chiefs of the misrule hold them to be, mere ropes of flax, to fall asunder at the first touch of the fires of popular phrenzy, or at the first grasp of a giant ambition."

The following resolution was adopted at a meeting of the Democratic Central Committee, held on the 20th January, 1868:

Resolved, That the parishes throughout the State, and the election precincts in the city of New Orleans, be requested to choose delegates to a Democratic State Convention, to assemble in the city of New Orleans, on the first Thursday of March next, and that one delegate be chosen for each two hundred votes, and one for each fraction over one hundred of the aggregate vote cast in 1860 for Bell, Breckinridge and Douglas.

THE M'CARDLE CASE.

The argument in the McCardle case was resumed. Mr. Hughes said that the petition of McCardle, appealing from the decision of the court, is founded on the assumption that the reconstruction laws are unconstitutional. The petition asserts that he is not accused of any military offense, but when he comes to explain the reasons of his arrest, says that he was charged with opposing the reconstruction acts. Hughes quoted an article which the petitioner published, showing the violence of the language toward the military authorities, and strong condemnation of the reconstruction acts.

The whole tenor of the reconstruction act of March, '67, contains no saving clause and gives no jurisdiction to any court of the United States to interfere with the habeas corpus acts. The act rather excludes the notion that it was to be a foot ball between the courts of the United States and the military power, between circuit courts and major generals, and between Congress and the Supreme Court. The military power of the government and the war making power is reserved to Congress alone by the Constitution; having waged war for four years, and the Supreme Court having recognized it as a solemn war.

The United States, as here represented, say that the action does not recognize the right of the judiciary to interfere with the political power now exercised in the late seceded States, and does not recognize it as having the power to interfere in the interval from the close of the war until now, when the work of reconstruction is in progress.

Hughes, in the support of his argument, referred the courts to various legal authorities.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Black expressed his surprise that the motion had been made to dismiss this case, as the court had already set a time to hear the argument on the subject. On former occasion the counsel for the United States were opposed to considering the case at all, but now they go it half cocked. Editorial articles which had been read were calculated to exasperate the friends of Gen. Ord, but his private opinion was that the epithets against that officer were not deserved. If it is true, as asserted, that neither this court nor the circuit court of Mississippi has any jurisdiction over this subject, then—the American people are in the precise condition the French people were in during the monarchy, when any man could be imprisoned and kept in prison until he died or was forgotten. Black said that the very law from which Hughes quoted expressly declares that the several courts of the United States, and the judges of these courts, shall have power to determine exactly such cases as this one, and it further authorizes them to issue writs of habeas corpus within their respective districts in the cases of persons who shall complain of being detained or held in prison contrary to the Constitution and laws of the United States. Where there is no exception a case falls within the general rule. The publication of editorial articles is not a military offense, and it cannot be made one by simply calling it so. As the case commenced in the circuit court it should be settled in the Supreme Court. Where doubt exists about the meaning of a law it is the practice of courts to give them to defendant for his benefit, so that mischief may be repaired as far as possible. Mr. Black, in conclusion, condemned the law which, he said, strikes down independent States.

The argument will be resumed next Friday by Senator Trumbull for the military authorities, and Judge Shankey for petitioner.

MOBILE, Feb. 4.—Gen. Hudson, commander in this city, having received information that registrars had refused the right and power of challenging votes, has requested the chief of police to notify registrars and judges of elections that this right must be respected or election will be invalid. He also notified registrars and judges of elections that the clerks appointed by the Democratic party permitted within each polling place. The election is passing off quietly.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 4.—The vote today on the question of ratifying the constitution is 1,681. Two white candidates voted,—all the others negroes.

ARMED SOLDIERS IN COURT.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 4.—Pending the trial of the editors of the Avalanche for contempt of court, Judge Hunter had a squad of soldiers in the court room. The lawyers remonstrated and several left the court, saying they would not practice under such circumstances. Gen. Granger finally ordered the troops away, and the court adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—The correspondence between the President and Grant shows that the President ordered Grant to obey no orders from Stanton, and Grant declines disobeying Stanton on the ground that Stanton is his superior officer, though the President's subordinate. The President must restrain Stanton from ordering, otherwise Grant must obey him. Grant in his letters claims that Sherman shared his views. Grant's last letter is dated yesterday, to which the President is replying to-night. It is claimed that the correspondence was hurried in to-day so as to choke off the President's reply to Grant's last letter, by saying in effect that only the defense of his honor as a man and a soldier induced him to write such a letter to the President, whom he accuses of trying to ruin him in the estimation of his countrymen. Grant admits that his acceptance of the secretaryship was to prevent the President placing into office an obstructor of reconstruction.

Documents, covering three columns of correspondence between the President, Grant and others, will be published in the morning. It is too long to telegraph, and as the matter involves the honor and veracity of high officials, a synopsis is unsafe.

SAVANNAH, Feb. 4.—There was a large negro meeting at the African Church to-day to advocate C. H. Hopkins for the office of mayor in place of Mayor Andrews, now before the military commission. A disturbance commenced outside with disorderly negroes resisting the police, who attempted to arrest them. The negroes drew pistols and the row became general. Reinforcements of the police drove off the rioters and captured the ringleaders. Lieut. Bell, of the police, was shot in the head and leg. Lieut. Howard was knocked off his horse with a brick, and several policemen and four or five negroes were slightly wounded—none killed. The rioters are now dispersed, but much excitement prevails among them.

The military commission is still in session examining witnesses, etc.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 5.—1,100 votes polled to-day—six white men voted, four of them being candidates. The election is progressing quietly.

MOBILE, Feb. 5.—3,572 votes were polled yesterday, and 3,572 to-day, of which thirty-six were white.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The cholera, which has made sad havoc in Buenos Ayres, has subsided to a great degree, and its entire eradication is confidently anticipated at an early day. The disease, however, still prevails to an alarming extent in the allied army in Paraguay.

No fighting since the departure of the last mail.

President Lopez, of Paraguay, remained at Humaita, and his forces were well supplied with provisions and munitions of war.

LONDON, February 1.—Dispatches from Athens report another battle between the Cretans and the Turks, in which the Cretans were victorious.

MADRID, February 1.—In accordance with the express determination to uphold the temporal power of the pope, a corps, known as the Papal Legion, is being formed.

THE American annexation treaty is being considered by a special committee of the Danish Legislature.

MARRIED.

On the evening of the 7th of January, 1868, by Rev. T. B. White, at the residence of the bride's father, Col. John L. Lewis, Captain WILLIAM SMITH WALLER, formerly of Kentucky, to Miss MARY C. LEWIS, of Minden, La.

On Thursday, January 9th, by Rev. R. S. Trippett, G. B. BERTRAND to Miss HENRIETTA MIESNER, all of Shreveport.

On January 9th, by Rev. R. S. Trippett, Mr. FRANKLIN PULLEN to Mrs. NANCY M. JOHNSON, both of Paola, county Texas.

On Thursday, the 16th of January, at the residence of the bride's mother, by Rev. R. S. Trippett, R. J. BOWMAN, Esq., of Mansfield, to Miss ANNIE CROWDER, of Caddo parish.

On Thursday, January 23, at the Methodist church, Shreveport, by Rev. R. S. Trippett, Mr. THOMAS POLAND, Jr., to Miss MATTIE A. GRISWOLD.

At the residence of F. Barksdale, Esq., December 12, 1867, at 8 o'clock p. m., by Rev. E. H. Mounger, Mr. ROBERT E. CRAIG to Miss EMILY J. BARKSDALE, all of Yazoo city, Mississippi.

OBITUARIES.

Died, at his residence, Cottage Hill Alabama, November 23, 1867, THOMAS JACKSON, aged thirty-nine years and five months. Brother Jackson's character was beautifully symmetrical. In all the relations of life he exemplified the deportment of a gentleman and the virtues of a Christian. He was by nature noble and affable, and this natural amiability being sublimated by a refining Christianity, gave him a completion of character that won upon all who knew him. In all business relations he was governed by justice, integrity, and high-toned principle. As a friend he was true and confiding. As a Christian he was strong in faith, rich in personal experience, abundant in labor, and benevolent to the utmost limits of his ability. He emphatically loved the church. The cause of Sabbath schools lay near his heart. He was a faithful teacher for many years. His house was a home for the preachers. There the weary itinerant could always find a hearty welcome and a place to rest. As I have been welcomed into that home circle, and, for the time, made one of them, I have often thought that a more congenial and happy family would be hard to find. To see this godly man, after the turmoils and perplexities of a day's business in the city, enter his house with a cheerful face for all, with a kind, cheering word for his aged mother, a smile of hope for his delicate sister, and a happy greeting for his own dear ones, was a lively scene indeed. And it was here, in the family circle, as a son, a brother, a husband and a father, that you saw the man without restraint—as he was, a noble soul, shedding light and joy to all around. Though an invalid himself for months before the final summons came, yet he seemed to lose sight of himself in his interest for those who had so long been accustomed to look up to him. But when he came to realize the fact that he was about to enter "the valley of the shadow of death" he calmly commended all to Him in whom he had put his trust. And then, having finished his work, without a murmur, with a smile of resignation and heavenly peace radiating his face, he fell asleep in Jesus. "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me: Write, from henceforth blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; even so, saith the spirit, for they rest from their labors, and their works follow them." J. M. BOLAND.

Mrs. EUGENIA OVERSTREET, wife of Dr. J. J. Overstreet, daughter of Rev. E. R. Strickland, died at Hollywood, Livingston parish, Louisiana, January 20th, 1868.

She was a member of the M. E. Church; amiable, affectionate in disposition and refined in feeling. Her most remarkable traits of character were love of music and solicitous care for the education of her children.

May God bless the four little orphans left without a mother's love! M. C. S.

WALTER MARVIN, youngest son of Rev. A. D. and Mrs. Kate Light Barlow, died in Canton, Mississippi, on the 26th of [illegible] 1868, aged two years, six months [illegible] days.

"Let [illegible] the lambs," said He,
"And [illegible] my breast;
Protection they shall find in me
In me be ever blest.

"Death may the bands of life unloose,
But can't dissolve my love:
Millions of infant souls compose
The family above."

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST IN GOLD COIN.

THE BEST INVESTMENT

FOR SURPLUS CAPITAL.

THE ATTENTION OF INVESTors, Trustees, Executors, and others desiring an unusually safe, reliable, and profitable form of permanent investment, is called to the advantages and assurances of the

Central Pacific Railroad

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company offer for sale their FIRST MORTGAGE THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT GOLD BONDS, and submit to investors the following, among other obvious considerations, and invite a comparison with the merits and excellences of any class of corporate securities:

I. These bonds are based upon the most vital and valuable part of the grand National Pacific Railroad, soon to become the main channel of communication on the continent.

II. The local settlement and the business therefrom is remarkably large and profitable, and most constantly increase.

III. The hardest portion of the road is now built, and the remainder will be rapidly carried forward over the Salt Lake plains.

IV. The greater part of the means necessary to build the road is provided by the United States Government upon a subordinate lien.

V. The State and chief cities of California have contributed upward of $3,600,000 to the enterprise, without lien.

VI. The grant of land is destined at early day to prove of far greater market value than the total of the first mortgage bonds issued upon the road and equipments.

VII. This road lies altogether among the gold and silver producing regions, and its revenues are received in gold.

VIII. The management of this Company has been distinguished for prudence and economy, and the surplus earnings, after payment of expenses and interest, are devoted to construction purposes.

IX. The interest liabilities of the Company upon the portion now in operation are less than a third the net earnings.

X. Both principal and interest are payable IN GOLD, under special provisions of both National and State enactment.

The bonds are in sums of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in January and July, and are offered for sale at 95 per cent of their par value and accrued interest from July 1 added, in currency.

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

These bonds bid fair to attain the most prominent position among the non-speculative investments of the country, and will be actively dealt in at the money centers in Europe.

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of ten to fifteen per cent in addition.

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return Express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the

GRANDFATHER'S DARLING.

BY IRENE L——.

"Where is my birdie?
Where is my sweet one?
Not for an hour have I heard his blithe song."
"Gone into dreamland, Soft! Do not wake him."
"Ah! while he's sleeping the time seems so long."

Down from the chamber
Slowly descending,
Out 'mong the garden-bloom grandfather goes;
In the green arbor
Sitting and thinking—
Twining above him the woodbine and rose;

All their rich odor
Lost on his senses—
Sitting and thinking and waiting alone;
Time passes slowly
Under the arbor.
Hark! 'Tis his sloging bird's ravishing tone.

Breaks from the window
Sweetest of music.
"Darling!"—how tender with heart-throbs the word!—
"Darling! O darling!
Grandfather's precious one!
Voice of more melody ear hath not heard.

Up to the chambe
Quickly ascending,
Grandfather moves with the step of a boy.
All the bright sunshine
Lost in the arbor
Flooding his features with beauty and joy.

To his arms springing,
Round his neck clinging,
Lovely and loving, and sweet as a rose;
Laughing and kissing,
And glad with the life
Only our being in babyhood knows;

Dear little birdie
From dreamland returns,
Flushed with new beauty, to grandfather's heart.
White locks and golden,
Sere leaf and blossom,
Mingling, though seventy summers apart.

A LITTLE HERO.

Passing through town a short time since, while the coasting season was at its height, I chanced to encounter a rosy-cheeked boy, who, school being finished, was hastening with his sled to the top of a hill not far off, where a number of his comrades were already assembled. Gay voices were challenging him to come and compete with them, and see who could ascend the hill first, each one asserting, in boyish fashion, that his sled was the swiftest. The youth's only answer was a merry laugh; but the quickened step and proud glance which he cast upon his newly-painted sled showed his opinion at least.

At a little distance from the group stood a tall boy in tattered clothes, looking wishfully on, ever and anon asking some questions of the boys, by whom, however, he was entirely neglected.

Just as my little hero (for I must call him so now) was making ready to start, he happened to see the longing, grieved gaze with which the poor boy was observing them. Quickly springing from his seat he darted toward him, and in a cheery voice exclaimed, "Charlie, you may slide in my place. I have slid a good deal this winter, and had just as lief you would as not." Oh, what a grateful look Charlie gave him! Some of the boys dissented at first, but the owner was firm, and at last Charlie, a victor, led off the astonished ranks of boys.

The incident was trivial in itself, but it suggested a long train of thought to me. If all the youth, and also "children of a larger growth," would be as desirous of promoting the happiness of those with whom they are surrounded, the paths of many would be strewed with roses where now are only thorns.

Children of poverty and want are many. Numerous are the opportunities for following the Master's footsteps, and doing good to all men; and let us remember that with "whatsoever measure we meet, it shall be measured unto us again."—Christian Banner.

THE ELDEST DAUGHTER AT HOME.—To be able to get a dinner, to sweep the room, to make a garment, to tend a baby, would add much to the list of a young lady's accomplishments. Where can we behold a more lovely sight than the eldest daughter of a family standing in the sweet simplicity of her new womanhood, by the side of her toiling, care-worn mother to relieve and aid her? Now she presides at the table, now directs in the kitchen, now amuses the fretting baby, now diverts half a score of little folks in the library. She can assist her young brothers in their studies, read the newspaper to her weary father, smoothe the aching brow of her revered mother. Always ready with a helping hand and cheerful smile, for every emergency, she is an angel of love and a blessing to the home circle. Should she be called out of it to originate a home of her own, would she be any less lovely or self-sacrificing?

SCIENTIFIC.

From the American Artisan.

Domestic Manufacture of Furs.

That furs are not more generally used by both sexes in this country is doubtless because of their expensiveness, and not from want of appreciation of their great utility, richness, and beauty. It is no extravagance to assert that every farmer's family may furnish their own fur collars, gloves, robes, and other articles of dress and ornament, with trifling expense, from the resources within their own reach; but from want of more knowledge on this subject valuable skins are wasted or disposed of for a mere fraction of their real value, and articles of apparel that should have been made from them are bought at extravagant prices of fur-dealers. The skins of raccoons, minks, musk-rats, rabbits, foxes, deer, cats, dogs, woodchucks, and skunks are all valuable. Handsome robes may be made from the skins of the last two animals, and the writer has seen fur coats made from the skins of woodchucks, well tanned, dyed, and trimmed, which were elegant as well as comfortable, and no one but a connoisseur would be able to guess their origin. Of the finer and nicer furs, beautiful collars, muffs, cuffs, caps, gloves, and trimmings may be made with a little ingenuity and perseverance; and who would not feel a greater satisfaction in wearing a nice article from the fact that it was something of their own manufacture, a product of their own taste and genius?

Very handsome floor-mats are made by tanning sheep-pelts and then dyeing them some bright color, which is done with very little trouble, the art of dyeing is now so familiar to almost every household. Furs may be dyed as easily as woolen goods, notwithstanding the impression that it is an art known only to the trade. Any dye that will color woolens will also dye furs, only care must be taken not to have the dye too hot or the texture of the skin will be injured.

The mode of tanning usually followed by city furriers is to rub the skins well with rancid butter, then tread them thoroughly in a tub or vat, after which a large quantity of sawdust is mixed with them, and the process of treading continued until all the grease is absorbed, when they are finished off by beating, working, and rubbing with chalk and potter's clay, whipping and brushing. An old trapper practiced this method with small skins, first washing with a suds of soap and salsoda to free them from grease, then rinsing in clear water to cleanse them from the suds, then rubbing as dry as possible, after which they were put into a mixture of two ounces of salt to a quart of water, added to three quarts of milk or bran-water, containing one ounce of best sulphuric acid, and stirred briskly for forty or fifty minutes; from this they are taken dripping into a strong solution of salsoda and stirred till they will no longer foam; they are then hung to dry, and when nearly dry are taken down and rubbed dry, when they are very soft and pliable. A very good and simple process in use among farmers is to sprinkle the flesh side, after scraping it well, with equal parts of pulverized alum and salt, or washing it well with a strong solution of the same, then folding the flesh side together, and rolling it compactly, in which state it should remain for eight or ten days; then it is opened, sprinkled with bran or sawdust to absorb the moisture, and rolled up again, and after remaining twenty-four hours the process is completed by a thorough rubbing and manipulation, on which the pliability depends. Skins when taken off should be freed from grease or flesh, by thorough scraping, when they may be dried and left to await the leisure of the owner. Previous to tanning they must be well soaked and wring dry.—Rural American, Utica, N. Y.

FARM AND GARDEN.

From the American Agriculturist.

LITTLE THINGS IN FARMING.

The whole success of a farmer hinges upon timely attention to little things. This, mainly, makes the difference between thrift and poverty. The philosophy of success is expressed in that old adage, 'For want of a nail a shoe was lost, for want of a shoe a horse was lost, for want of a horse a man was lost." It is a little thing to keep accounts of the pecuniary transactions upon the farm. A half hour Saturday evening would enable most farmers to know just how they stand with the world. Yet we suspect half of the men who cultivate the soil never make an entry in a book, and for want of this the account runs up fearfully at the store, and many articles of luxury are purchased for which they are unable to pay at the end of the year. Debt accumulates, the farm is mortgaged, and finally lost, for want of a little paper and ink. It is a little thing to put up a tool in its place when not in use. Yet many have no tool-house, or place of shelter for any implement or vehicle. Things are left where they were last used, the plow in the field, the cart in the yard, the chains in the stable, the harness in the wood-house, the axe at the wood-pile, and the rakes in the corn crib. Many do not even house the expensive implements they have bought, and reapers and thrashers are treated like old plows and harrows. The parts made of iron and steel grow rusty, and the wood decays. A machine that is good for thirty years with proper care is used up in five by abuse. It is a very little thing to turn a nut when it is loose. Yet for want of the tightening the nut is lost, the bolt comes out, and the loaded wagon breaks down on the way to market, and a whole day for man and team is lost. It is a little thing to keep a horse properly groomed, yet for want of clean fetlocks the skin cracks and the horse is lame, and the owner loses the use of him for months or weeks. Ventilation is a small affair, yet for want of it the health of stock in stables suffers severely, and disease sets in. It is a small affair to provide good seed at the beginning of the year, but the whole success of the season depends upon it. It as an easy thing to deal fairly with your neighbors and make a name that is better than "precious ointment." Many cheat on small occasions, do not deliver what they sell, and get a reputation for meanness that stands in the way of their success.

Blackberries—How to Propagate Them.—Stake your ground into beds fifteen feet wide, running north and south. To each rod in length spread a cart load of compost, and harrow so as to lightly mix it with the soil and thoroughly pulverize it. Then plow the bed to the depth of ten to twelve inches, commencing in the middle to plow and going round it till finished, leaving it thus somewhat higher in the middle when finished. The harrow is then to be thoroughly used again. If the soil is heavy after plowing, add a load per rod in length of well rotted leaf mold from the woods, or from the bottom of an old straw stack, which has rotted sufficiently to form a black loose mold. This being well harrowed into the surface of the bed keeps it from baking after rains, and conduces largely to the health and vigor of the plants next year. Then lay off your drills into which your cuttings are to be placed, twenty inches apart, running across the bed. The drills should be about seven inches wide and five inches deep. Fill about one inch with good compost, using about half a load per rod of bed. Dig in the compost to thoroughly mix it with the soil at the bottom of the drill. Draw more soil into the drill, leaving about two inches deep and four or six wide. The cuttings are now placed in the center of the drill from three to twelve inches apart (the greater distance producing the larger plants.) Cover the cuttings by drawing in the soil so as to leave the bed level and the cutting covered about two inches. When hard freezing weather comes, place brush around the bed, and, with leaves from the woods, cover the bed about six inches deep, so as to keep out the frost. The deep furrows on each side of the bed to be kept well cleaned during the winter, so as to drain the bed of all superfluous water. Early in spring the covering is to be removed from immediately above each drill. The plants will soon make their appearance above ground. If very hot sun should seem to wilt them in the least, a narrow board should be placed on the south side of each row for a few weeks. As the plants grow replace the covering of leaves, to prevent the ground being affected so severely by drouth.

The London underground railroad has carried, since its completion, twelve million passengers.

Investigate the Matter.—We do not fully comprehend perhaps the nature of those physiological principles which render the frequent change of seeds so important, but no one, we presume, will doubt that it is advantageous to have an exchange of seeds as often as once in three or four years. Potatoes of any variety which have been brought from a distance do much better and are more prolific and valuable when grown continuously for a long period on the same soil. This remark applies with equal force to all vegetables. Hence it is that we observe judicious and intelligent agriculturists busy in effecting exchanges, obtaining corn, wheat, rye, and other grain from remote localities to propagate from.

The long breeding from the same stock, in case of domestic animals, deteriorates the breed, and the same practice of "breeding in and in," in the case of vegetables, may and doubtless does produce a similar result. That the practice, in itself, is highly pernicious, there is no manner of question. If the long, red potatoes, for instance, be cultivated for ten years on the same farm, and from the same stock, it is said that it will be found at the expiration of that period to have degenerated or run out. The same fact is observable in case of Indian corn, and this without the deteriorating effect of any intermixtures, or unfavorable influences of any extraneous kind.

How to Break a Mule.—Don't fight or abuse him. After you have harnessed him and he proves to be refractory, keep your own temper, slack your reins, push him round, backward and forward, not roughly; and if he will not do what you want, tie him to a post and let him stay there a day or so without food or water. Take care also that he does not lie down, and be careful to have a person to guard him, so that he does not foul in the harness. If he will not go after a day or two of this sort of treatment, give him one or two more of it, and my word for it he will come to his senses and do anything you want from that time forward. The only way to keep a mule from kicking you is to handle it a great deal when young, and accustom it to the ways and actions of men. You must, through kindness, convince it that you are not going to harm it, and you can do that best by taking hold of it in a gentle manner every time it appears to be frightened. Such treatment I have always found more effective than all the beating and abusing you can apply. The mule is peculiar in his dislikes. Many of them, when first harnessed, so dislike a blind bridle that they will not work in it. When you find this, let him stand for say a day in the blinders, and then take them off, and in forty-nine cases out of fifty he will go at once.

Making Manure.—One of the very best things to soak up manure water, and make into the best of manure, is common clay. It will pay any farmer well to haul clay to his barn-yard for its absorbing properties. When this cannot be had, the washing of road sides, cleaning of ditches, or anything that comes to hand, may be used instead. There are many other more complicated ways of "making manures" by chemical ingredients, but this is a simple one, which every one can understand. All it wants is the command of labor, and this is the main point in which so many farmers err. Not to "employ much," but to do all possible oneself, and let the "rest go," is the general plan. The farmer forgets that when he buys a ton of guano he has employed sailors, ship-owners, commission merchants, and many others, at a rate at which another hand on his farm, employed at nothing else but making manure, would have produced him immeasurably more value. It is not so much what is made, as what is saved, that leads to riches; and how to economise in manure, and yet have an abundance, is one of the great secrets of becoming a rich farmer.—T. Meehan, in Forney's Press.

Fire in Chimneys.—It frequently happens that the soot of a farm house chimney ignites, and occasionally the sparks therefrom cause destruction to the building. The fire may be arrested in a great measure by throwing salt on the fire below, which partly extinguishes the flames; stopping the chimney at the top arrests the current and contributes to the same result. It should be constantly impressed on the mind of every person that whenever a dwelling takes fire, every door should be kept closed to prevent the flames from spreading.

It is reported that an agricultural society somewhere in the State of New York offers larger premiums for butter and cheese than it does for horse-racing.—Ex.

That society must be made up of inveterate old fogies.—Wis. Farmer.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.

TENTH SESSION.

The exercises of the school will be resumed on Wednesday, October, 2d, 1867.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education.

Particular care is bestowed on the moral and social culture of the pupils.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a satchel for dirty clothes.

It is urgently requested that Students be prompt in their attendance. A few days absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms: Board and Tuition per session. $360.

Payments.—$200 in advance—balance 1st March.

Tuition of Day Scholars, per session, $75 00 payable—one half in advance—balance 1st March.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the School demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as Teachers, gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Doremus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North Latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $50 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body, all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious efforts a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are respected to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, we also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will not as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and our the center-tables of a Christian people.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER, next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited some improvement since our last issue. An increased number of merchants from the interior, who have come down to lay in their spring supplies, have imparted more animation to the leading branches of trade. Cotton, sugar and molasses have all been in good request, the latter at very full prices. The movement in Western produce, on the contrary, has been of limited extent, both the supplies and the demand being moderate. Corn presents the only exception to this remark, the receipts of it having been much more liberal and the sales to a fair amount, but at easier prices.

COTTON.—We stated in our last report that the market closed buoyant at the advanced rates of 15 to 16c. for Ordinary, 16½ to 17 for Good Ordinary, 17¾ to 18 for Low Middling, 18½ to 18⅝ for Middling, and.— to 19 for Strict Middling, since which, under the discouraging accounts from Liverpool and New York, prices have given way fully ½c. On Saturday the movement was characterised by a manifest falling off in the demand, and an unwillingness on the part of the buyers who came forward to go on unless at easier rates; but as factors evinced a disposition to make the required concessions, the business was to a fair extent, comprising 3,600 bales at irregular prices, Middling selling as low as 18c. and as high as 18½c, while the bulk of the business was on the basis of 17¾c. for Low Middling and 18¼c. for Middling. On Monday the market opened with quite a lively demand, which was stimulated by the supplies offering containing a moderate amount of Ouachita cottons, which met a ready sale at the ruling rates, and 4,000 bales changed hands at still easier prices, the New York and Liverpool accounts having a decidedly depressing influence, Low Middling ruling at 17½c. and Middling at 18 to 18¼c. On Tuesday operations were checked by dark and rainy weather, but still, as the supply was more ample, and as, under the necessity of realizing, factors evinced a willingness to give way in accordance with the decline reported at New York; the demand was resumed, although with less spirit than on Monday, and the sales amounted to 3,250 bales, at prices showing a further falling off of ¼c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 10,850 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 19,452 bales, against 8,395 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 11,057 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 351,870 bales, against 485,482 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 139,365 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 61,774 bales to Great Britain, of 59,342 to France, and of 98,946 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	15 to 15½
Good Ordinary	16½ to 16¾
Low Middling	17¼ to 17¾
Middling	17¾ to 18
Strict Middling	18¼ to —

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY

UNABRIDGED

OVER 3000 FINE ENGRAVINGS.

10,000 Words and Meanings not in other Dictionaries.

A necessity to every intelligent family, student, teacher and professional man. What Library is complete without the best English Dictionary?

The work is the richest book of information in the world. There is probably more real education in it than can be bought for the same amount of money in any language. Every parsonage should have a copy at the expense of the parish. It would improve many pulpits more than a trip to Europe; and at a much less cost.—N Y Christian Advocate.

Lay it upon your table by the side of the Bible; it is a better expounder than many which claim to be expounders.—M. Life Boat.

In one vol. of 1,840 Royal Quarto Pages. Published by G & C MERRIAM, Springfield Mass. Sold by all Booksellers.

ALSO, JUST PUBLISHED,

Webster's National Pictorial Dictionary, 1040 Pages Octavo. 600 Engravings. Price $7 00.

The work is really a gem of a Dictionary, just the thing for the million.—American Educational Monthly.

Specimen numbers 10 cents.

BISHOP SIMPSON says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the best Magazines published for children."

BISHOP STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I believe that its introduction into every household would prove a blessing to young and old.

REV. GEO. D. BOARDMAN says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I am delighted with 'The Children's Hour.' I do not see how a more entertaining, instructive or profitable Magazine could be put in the hands of our children."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"This dear little monthly visitant we believe to be by far the purest, safest, and most attractive magazine for the little ones at home, published in this country."

MR. JOHN B. GOUGH says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I can endorse it thoroughly."

It is a most welcome visitor to the family of children at my own home."

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

is as beautiful as the best typography and the best artists can make it. Two volumes a year, one volume in January and July. The number for January, 1868, will be the most beautiful number of a child's magazine ever published in America.

PREACHER-LIFE.

MR. EDITOR: It was not long after I was converted before I began to be conscious of certain drawings toward the ministry. Indeed I can recollect that even before conversion I used to think it must be a blessed thing to be a successful preacher. As I contemplated it in the distance, as among the probabilities, I thought I was sincere in being willing to become one, if it was the Lord's will; but the nearer the prospect became, and the more tangible the idea, the more I inclined to hesitate and consider. My conscience was too well taught to permit me to think of refusing a manifest call to preach. "It is certainly wrong to run before a call, but if the good Lord will convince me it is his will, I will not confer with flesh and blood." Sometimes, when cold in religion, I felt as if all impressions about preaching were delusions; at other times, when enjoying religion, or after hearing a faithful sermon, to preach would seem to be my duty. But the ever-convenient excuse, "Well, if it is my duty, God will make it plain to me," would quiet my conscience and procastinate my decision.

Thus matters stood until a crisis was brought about. I had gone to the quarterly meeting, for the circuit in which I lived, on Saturday. After service I was talking with the class-leader, when Bro. D., the missionary to the negroes, requested him to fill an appointment the next day. "Oh, no," said the class-leader, "I can't go; but (turning to me) here is the very man to do it; get him to go." "No, sir," said I emphatically, "that is out of my line." Bro. D. turned away with a sorrowful air, and said, "Well, the negroes will have to be disappointed."

I got on my horse to ride home, when the following train of reflection came up: "Now you have repeatedly said that if you were convinced that it was your duty to preach, you would not shrink back. How are you ever to be convinced, unless you test the matter. Here, now, is a favorable opportunity. To go and hold service with these negroes will do no harm, even if the matter stops there, and it may dispel your doubts." The suggestion seemed reasonable, yet the test was indeed a trying one to me. The more I thought of it, the more wrought up I became. It seemed to be meeting the objection I had heretofore made fairly.

Reaching home I took my Bible and sought the solitude of the woods, where I spent the whole evening in endeavoring to decide on my duty, and to summon courage to do it. I tried in vain to sleep that night. My mind was too intensely excited. All through its silent hours, even till the very break of the next day, visions of preacher-life rapidly chased themselves through my thoughts.

When the broad blaze of the Sabbath sun brought me back again to every-day life, a temptation to dismiss from my mind all thoughts of holding service for the negroes came up so strong and plausible as to have been irresistible, had it not been for a plain consciousness that if I did, I would be falsifying my conscience and committing sin. As I drew in sight of the negro quarter, again the tempter was most powerfully at work. How could I go up and ask to hold religious service in a community where only a few years back I had been known in any other character rather than as a preacher. Hitching my horse for a few moments, I kneeled by the roadside to get strength for my duty. Gathering resolution, I rode to the overseer's house, told him my business, and asked him to assemble the negroes, remarking that he need not trouble himself to attend, seemingly out of consideration for him, but really because I preferred no other audience but the negroes. My precaution was all useless, however, as he placed himself near the house, out of sight, and heard all I had to say.

The position was indeed a strange one—to see the negroes looking up to me as a preacher, and expecting divine service! God helped me through with it, however, and I explained and urged the duty of prayer as best I could.

There was no sudden solution of my doubts after I had finished the service; there was no remarkable divine influence upon my own heart; neither was there any unusual impression upon the congregation; but as I rode away, such a calm, painfully pleasing consciousness that I was in the path of duty, and that I must go forward, took possession of me, as was more convincing than either signs or wonders. And ever since a determination to follow the openings of Providence, to do the duty nearest to me, and all others as they come up in their turn, has so strengthened this call that I have never for one moment doubted it.

STONEWALL JACKSON—A CHARACTERISTIC INCIDENT.—In the Religious Herald for this week we find the following interesting incident in the life of Gen. T. J. Jackson, which gives us an insight into some of the thoughts that occupied his mind the day after the great battle in which he won the immortal soubriquet of "Stonewall:" "A few days after the first battle of Manassas an eager, anxious crowd was assembled at the post office in Lexington, Va., on the arrival of the mail. The greatest excitement prevailed, and things "from the front" were eagerly sought after. The venerable Dr. White (pastor of the Presbyterian Church) took a letter from the post office, and recognizing it as in the handwriting of Brigadier General (afterward "Stonewall") Jackson, he said to the crowd, "Here is a letter from Gen. Jackson—now we will have full and authentic particulars of the battle." The crowd eagerly urged him to read aloud, and pressed round to hear the expected stirring news from the field of conflict. He broke the seal, and to the great disappointment of all, found only these few lines:

"MANASSAS JUNCTION, July 22, 1861.

"MY DEAR PASTOR: I remember that my subscription to Domestic Missions is about due. Please find enclosed $30. Yours, very truly,

"T. J. JACKSON."

No word about the great battle in which he had played so conspicuous a part—no time or inclination to tell of those heroic deeds which rendered famous, forever, "Stonewall Jackson and the Stonewall Brigade"—but he could afford the time to send to his pastor money which he had promised to the treasury of the Lord. The example of this great and good man teaches a lesson which many will do well to heed.

A PERMANENT INDUSTRY.—We received last week, says the San Jose Mercury, from Judge J. Billings, of Santa Clara, a box of Zante currants or 'grapes, dried and ready for market. We found the fruit much superior to the imported currant. The Zante is a small seedless grape, very sweet, and a remarkably prolific bearer. From a dozen vines, four years old, Judge Billings dried, the present season, over fifty pounds of our hardiest and best growers, and it is admirably adapted to this climate. We look forward to the cultivation of this grape, and the preparation of the fruit for market, as one of the permanent industries of this valley.

THE people of the Southern States are recommended to turn their attention to the culture of the olive. This tree, it is said, will thrive anywhere from the southern boundary of Virginia to the Gulf of Mexico. It is as easily propagated as the willow, and should be set out in limbs two or three inches in diameter. These will bear in three years; but if small slips be planted, it will take them fifteen years to do so. In five years the former will yield a full crop. The tree bears identially. It should be pruned every other year, and cuttings planted. It requires little attention, and is a source of great revenue in Southern Europe

BISHOP PAINE'S VISITATIONS.

We extract the following paragraphs from a very interesting communication from Bishop Paine to the Nashville Christian Advocate:

The fourth Conference was the Mississippi, held at Natchez. Here the attendance was not more than half, owing to three things: the prevalence of yellow fever, misunderstanding as to the time of the session, and the want of means to get there. It was, nevertheless, a very pleasant meeting in respect to the weather, the pleasure of a reunion of the members, and the resolution evinced by the preachers to press on the struggle, even through poverty and great discouragements. I found this Conference in a very sad condition as to finances. A great portion of their territory, and the richest, is almost utterly, and for the next ten or twenty years, hopelessly ruined, by the overflow of the great river, the destruction of the levees, the inability of proprietors, and of the State itself, to reconstruct them, and the ruin of the blacks as laborers. The whites are not the only sufferers, for while they have lost countless wealth, the freedmen, on the river especially, have lost the use of the capital which would have given them employment, and are thrown upon the world without intelligence to manage for themselves, or industry. Thousands of them are doomed to suffer for food, and many to die of starvation without assistance. The hogs and stock will soon all be gone, and then they must beg or starve—or, as many apprehend, turn banditti to prey upon society. My kind host, Dr. H., when asked by me how he had got along since the war, replied: Very well; he at once ceased trying to work negroes, as he knew that would not do, and gave up his plantations on the river to rest, selling off everything, cotton, mules, etc., and resuming the practice of his profession. The products of his farms, although untenanted, were likely to be quite profitable, as they were rapidly producing a fine crop of cotton-wood trees, which would bring a nice income when sold to steamers. Thus he had escaped the cotton tax, the vexations and loss which all had suffered who had tried to live by planting. But instead of the fleet of steamers which formerly bore full loads, now they are few and only half freighted. Two years have sufficed to engulf the little capital which survived the war, and to-day the South is fifty per cent. poorer than twelve months ago. The preachers share their full proportion in this general destitution, for the attempt to economize is usually begun at the expense of the church, and preachers and doctors are generally the last to be paid. Hence the deficit of the preachers' and the beneficiaries was distressing. Scarcely a single preacher had received his allowance, and numbers had failed to get one-half, or even one-fourth of it. Under these circumstances superannuated preachers, widows, orphans, and destitute laboring preachers, in common with the bishops, came out minus. Indeed, scarcely any of the itinerant preachers could have got through the past year, if they had not supplemented their salaries by the labor of their own hands.

Here, too, I was requested to appoint Brother Taylor to begin the organization of a separate colored conference, the preachers entering into the plan quite heartily.

Louisiana Conference, held in New Orleans, closed my tour of regular visitations. Here too the attendance was small—the destitution greater and more general, insomuch that this, once the most liberal of all our conferences in the support of its ministers and beneficiaries, fell of necessity behind all in this respect. My host was T. K. Price, an acquaintance of fifty years, and a fine specimen of a Christian gentleman, who delights to give and work as a layman for the cause of God. All the evils allluded to in Mississippi are intensified here. Thirteen parishes, the richest in the State, and perhaps in the world, have been ruined. The overflow, the worms, the idleness, vices, and vagrancy of the freedmen, following the desolations of the war, have done their work. Many of the preachers were obliged to abandon their circuits, and of the few who kept on their accustomed way, none closed the year free from debt and embarrassment. And yet enough were found to occupy nearly the whole field, and in reliance on God spend another year in trying to do good. They are a noble set of godly men. To add to the general despondency, we found a convention in full blast, constituted mainly, if not exclusively, of negroes and radicals, imported and native, framing a constitution, the great object of which seemed to be to give political superiority and social equality to the African race. Thus the most delicate and difficult work of statesmanship is in the hands of an ignorant and inferior race, utterly unfit for the task, and urged on by white men who have no feelings in common with those over whom they domineer. But enough! May God give us grace to bear our misfortunes, and speedily "make the wrath of man to praise Him!"

I may conclude by saying that in all my intercourse with planters and preachers in Mississippi and Louisiana, I heard of one, and only one, man who had gained by planting last year. He was from Opelousas, and had raised sugar. The white man cannot, and the black man will not, work continuously the entire summer, and cotton requires this; but sugar does not. Therefore sugar may continue to be cultivated to a considerable amount, but a great crop of cotton will never be until many years and changes take place. Many are moving to Opelousas and the adjacent sugar-making region which is not subject to the overflow—but Louisiana as a State is ruined for the present.

OUR PUBLIC MEN.—We find the following floating in our exchanges, but cannot vouch for the accuracy of the classification:

President Johnson is a non-professor of religion. Of the seven members of his Cabinet there is only one professor of religion, Secretary Welles, who is a communicant in the Episcopal Church. Secty Browning attends the Presbyterian Church, the other five, when they go at all, go to the Episcopal. Of the nine judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, two only are members—Chief Justice Chase, who is a Methodist, and Justice Grier, who has long been a ruling elder in the Old School Presbyterian Church. The United States Senate contains, at present, fifty-four members; of these nineteen are professors of religion. As two of these are Unitarians, it only leaves seventeen belonging to evangelical churches. They are distributed among the religious denominations thus: Episcopal, 1; Reformed Dutch, 1; Baptist, 2; Methodist, 2; Presbyterian, 4; and Congregational, 7. Gen. Grant, when in Washington, is a regular attendant at Wesley Chapel, M. E. Church. Chief Justice Chase also regularly attends the services of the same church. Mr. Taylor, Commissioner of Indian affairs, and Mr. Gooding, Marshal of the District of Columbia, are also Methodists. Attorney Gen. Stansbury was also raised a Methodist; he is an alumnus of Alleghany College. Secretary Stanton was formerly a class-leader of the M. E. Church. General Howard was formerly a Methodist, but for several years past has been a member—at one time a preacher—of the Congregational Church.

POULTRY IN WINTER.—Before the hens begin to lay generally, make a careful study of them, if breeding for fancy at all, and divide up the flock; put the finest pullets with the best old cock, and the best hens with your choicest cockrels. Give six hens to one cock, and set a few clutches of nine eggs each, in a month. A correspondent says the best place he ever had for young turkeys was an empty hay loft. No place could be better for the earliest broods of chickens, if the barn be light enough. Early chickens sell well as broilers, and are generally the prize-takers at the fall shows.—Ohio Farmer.

WILBUR FISK.

Of Dr. Fisk, one of the most eminent men in American Methodism, Dr. Stevens, the historian, in his last volume, just issued, says:

"His moral character was as perfect as that of any man who it has been the writer's happiness to know. His intimate friends will admit that there is hardly a possibility of speaking too favorably of him in this respect. It has been often remarked by those who had years of personal relations with him, that they were literally at a loss to mention one moral defect that marred the perfect beauty of his nature. This is saying very much; it is saying what cannot be said of one man, perhaps, in a million, but it can be deliberately said of this saintly man. Sereni, cheerful, exempt from selfishness, pride, and vanity; tender, yet manly in his sensibilities; confiding in his friendships; entertaining hopeful views of Divine Providence and the destiny of man; maintaining the purest and yet the most unelaborate piety, a piety that appeared to be love, enjoy and do all things good, and yet to be "careful for nothing;" he seemed to combine the distinctive charms that endear to us the beautiful character of Fenelon and Channing, Edwards and Fletcher of Madely. His humility was profound, and surrounded him with a halo of moral loveliness. It was not a burden of penance under which his soul bowed with self-cherishing agony, still less was it a voluntary humility, an assumed self-abasement; but it seemed the spontaneous and tender demeanor of his spirit; it mingled with the cheerful play of his features, and gave hallowed suavity to his very tones. It was his rare moral character, more even than his intellectual eminence, that gave him such magical influence over the minds of others, and rendered him so successful in the government of literary institutions. All about him felt self-respect in respecting him. To offend him was self-affliction, which even the audacity of reckless youth could not brook.

"He lived for many years in the faith and exemplification of St. Paul's sublime idea of Christian perfection. He prized that great tenet as one of the most important distinctions of Christianity. His own experience respecting it was marked with signal circumstances, and from the day he practically adopted it till he triumphed over death, its impress was radiant on his daily life. With John Wesley, he deemed this important truth—promulgated, in any very express form, almost solely by Methodism in these days—to be one of the most solemn responsibilities of his church, the most potent element in the experimental divinity of the Scriptures. In his earlier religious history he had felt the influence of those temptations, which have betrayed so many young men from the Methodist ministry into other communions, where better worldly auspices, rather than better means for self-development or usefulness were to be found; but when he received the baptism of this great grace, his purified heart could not sufficiently utter his thankfulness that he had been providentially kept within the pale of the church which taught it. This one was a denominational distinction sufficiently important to be set off against any drawback that Methodism might present. In a letter to a brother clergyman he expressed, with overflowing feelings, his renewed love for the church. 'I thank God,' he said, 'that I ever saw this day. I love our church better than ever. How glad I am that I never left it.' There are two periods at which a Methodist assuredly feels no regret for connection with the denomination: when he learns by experience what is the meaning of its instructions respecting the highest Christian life, and when death dismisses him from its communion to the church above.

"On the 22d of February, 1837, in the 48th year of his age, Wilbur Fisk received that dismissal. His chamber had been for days sanctified, as it were, by the glory of the Divine presence, and broken utterances were full of consolation and triumph over death. 'Glorious!' was the last whispered expression of his religious feelings."

That mind which is not furnished with inward sense of the Divine will not comprehend the true worth of it; but when wisdom does displays its own excellencies and glories in a purified soul, it entertains them with the greatest love and delight, and receives its own image reflected back to it in the sweetest returns of love and

To the Preachers and People of the Montgomery and Mobile Conferences:

DEAR BRETHREN AND FRIENDS: When the late war began the good people of East Selma were building a Methodist Church. The war brought everything to a standstill, leaving the house half unfinished. We are very anxious to complete it at once, and, if you will lend the helping hand, we can do it. We are poor here, like the people are everywhere. It will require about $600 to defray all necessary expenses.

Brethren, will you help us? Will you do what you can? If you will, please inclose the small sum of 50 cents, and send to my address. Times are hard. We will not ask you for more—unless you want to give more. I appeal to the brethren of the Conferences, to the private and official members of the church, to the little boys and girls of our Sabbath schools.

"The fields are white unto the harvest, and sinners are falling by the cruel hand of death." The voice of omnipotence is heard to say, "He that giveth to the poor leadeth to the Lord."

R. E. CARY.

[Brother Cary asks for too little. Does he expect twelve hundred responses? He should ask for $5 in place of 50 cents. Times are hard, but not quite so hard as his modest request would indicate. When people are pressed to a point where they can give only 50 cents, they give nothing. "Ask largely, that your joy may be full," is the Lord's direction to all needy persons.—EDITOR.]

AUTHENTIC INTELLIGENCE OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.—Return of the Search Expedition.—The Livingstone search expedition returned to Plymouth, England, on the 19th of January. The members of the expedition are satisfied that Dr. Livingstone was not murdered. He did not take the route expected from the Ruvuma river, at about 11 degrees south along the north cost of Lake Nyassa, in from 36 degrees to 34 degrees east, but from the Ruvuma went south, round the south end of Lake Nyassa, going as far as 14 degrees 28 south. Thence he proceeded to the northwest, and was left pursuing that route, either with the view of exploring the west coast of Lake Nyassa, and thus ascertaining how far it extends north, and then to proceed on to Lake Tanganyika, or he had gone direct for Tanganyika, and thence down the Nile home.

Matuka, Makata, Marenga and Maksura, mentioned by the Johanna men, were found on the southern route instead of the northern. The expedition followed Dr. Livingstone up to within a few miles of where it was reported he was murdered, and there found that the doctor and his "boys" were ferried over a marshy lake by Marenga, but the Johanna men under Moosa made a detour round the lake and returned next day to Marenga, saying they had deserted Livingstone, and should return to the coast, because he was leading them into a country where they would be murdered by the Mavito. The expedition also had interviews with the native porters who had carried Livingstone's luggage five days' journey further to Pastombe.

MEERSCHAUM.—J. S. Witner. The material of which the true Meerschaum pipes are made is a mineral found in some parts of Turkey and Greece. Chemically it is a silicate of magnesia and in composition allied to soap-stone. It being very light, the fanciful name Meerschaum, foam of the sea, was given to it, which has led to the not uncommon idea that it is in some way prepared from sea froth. In its rough state it looks like a lump of very white clay. It is easily carved and worked into shape, after which it is put into boiling wax, and then polished. Imitations are made so like the true article that only an experienced eye can tell the difference.—American Agriculturist.

THE ORGAN.

BY EDWARD ROWLAND SILL.

It is no harmony of human making.
Though men have built those pipes of burnished gold;
Their music, out of nature's heart awaking,
Forever new, forever is of old.

Man makes not—only finds—all earthly beauty,
Catching a thread of sunshine here and there,
Some shining hebdole in the path of duty,
Some echo of the words that fired the air,

That prelude is a wind among the willows,
Rising until it meets the lofty fir;
Now a wild ocean, tossing his great billows
Among the hollow caverns of the shore.

It is the voice of some vast people pleading
For justice from an ancient chains and wrong—
The tramp of God's avenging armies treading
With shouted thunders of triumphant song.

O soul, that sittest chanting dreary dirges,
Couldst thou but rise on some divine desire,
As those deep chords upon their swelling surges
Bear up the wavering voices of the choir!

But ever lurking in the heart there lingers
The trouble of a false and jarring tone,
As some great organ, which unskillful fingers
Vex into discords when the Master's gone.

GOOD NEWS FROM NEW IBERIA.

NEW IBERIA, La., Feb. 3, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith send you the names of twenty new subscribers to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. These twenty copies, with those already taken by members of the church here, will put the ADVOCATE within the reach of every member of my charge. I am trying an experiment, and feel sanguine of success, not only in extending the circulation of a good paper, but also in enlarging my field of usefulness, in increasing the religious zeal and fidelity of my flock, and in adding in various ways to the spiritual and temporal welfare of both pastor and members. If any of your agents are ambitious to do good in this way, and would like to know how the ADVOCATE is put within reach of every member of a charge that has shared as largely as almost any other, in the desolations of war, that has suffered from floods and pestilence, and two successive failures of crops, I have no objection to furnishing them with the plan I have adopted.

I have also ordered a supply of Disciplines, with a view to put a copy alongside of the ADVOCATE in every family. I believe we have a membership of average intelligence, yet I doubt not the prosperity and usefulness of the church here are greatly retarded for lack of knowledge—just such as may be gained from the ADVOCATE and Discipline, which I sincerely hope will be faithfully read.

In addition to the above-mentioned sources of information, every charge should have its Bible class, for the benefit of the entire membership. Ours meets every Monday evening, at 4 P. M. I hope soon to see it grow into a congregation, and believe it will, by reason of the plan upon which it is conducted.

Instead of regular questions and answers we read the lesson, then the teacher raises questions upon each passage, and as many as feel disposed express their views briefly upon the passage, thus raising other questions, and so on through the chapter, making the exercises to consist of a brief and pleasant debate on each question. This mode of conducting a Bible class enables many to attend and receive benefit whose timidity and want of information would cause them to shrink from the ordeal of direct questions and answers.

Some of the colored people among us, who are trying to be religious, have at last made a move in the right direction. For several years these people have been afloat. They have been on the water and under the water, and have come up out of the water. They have been Methodists and Baptists, have had "headmen" and "starters" of various enterprises, but seemed incapable of accomplishing anything like church organization.

A few weeks since they came to a dead stand, and after some deliberation determined to give their wanderings over, sent for me, and asked to be received into the M. E. Church South. On last Sabbath a week I received twenty of the leading members into the church, and organized a board of stewards and trustees.

They have raised the requisite amount of money, and are about purchasing a lot of ground on which will be erected, in a few weeks, a house to answer the double purpose of a school-house and place of worship for the present.

Yours, A. E. GOODWYN.

CHAT ABOUT CONFERENCE.

SITTING NO. II.

The first thing when you get to the place where Conference is to be held, is to find where you are to be domiciled, to be introduced to the family, and formally voted the freedom of the house, to find out who are to be your companions at the place, to repair your toilet without shaving, and thus get ready to start in quest of adventure. This providing places for preachers, by the by, is often a matter of some delicacy and difficulty, as it frequently happens that the older and more reputable portion of the Conference have sundry ailments and otherwise peculiar reasons why they must have a "good place, close to where the Conference is to be held," while some of the younger ones, inexperienced as yet, have no more discretion than to carry their wives along with them. (In passing, we remark that it is felt by some to be a reflection on the good sense of preachers and their wives for the latter to be publicly invited not to go to Conference; and we hope this practice will cease.)

We once had a peep into the portfolio of the preacher upon whom devolved this duty of distributing the brethren, and every now and then, in sifting the letters marked "Conference," we would come across the indorsement:—"Goat on my horn No. 1," "Goat on my horn No. 2," etc.

Oh! the sour looks and elongated faces that the stationing-man has to encounter at times, accompanied with a faint guttural interrogation about a "hotel," etc. Verily, this "appointing power" has some of a bishop's trials beforehand. There is the further similarity, also, that as every faithful preacher generally concludes that he had one of the best appointments in the Conference, so almost every one, at the end of an annual session, thinks he had the best place to stay at, and departs in good humor. Nor does the preacher forget the obligation to bless the house at which he stops. He bears in mind the magnanimous hospitality that characterizes these occasions, and covets the privilege of "ministering in spiritual things" in return. He is aware that the occasion of a Conference is a fulcrum for the operation of a moral influence upon a community of almost incalculable extent, and he is not unskillful in such mechanics. He fain would furnish his proportion of this combined force by leaving the family to feel "that they had entertained an angel unawares," and to cherish his visit in pleasant and perpetual memory until he come again. We were the guest of Colonel Sledge, the ci devant proprietor of the "Sledge House," but now it is in the hands of another gentleman and the colonel and his lady are boarders. We have anticipated somewhat of our reception and treatment, however, and we turn out to look up the "class rooms." These are not hard to find, as we are very apt to fall in with some of the neophytes en route to these places. There is generally a hurrying to and fro, also, of some laggard members of the different committees, who have discovered, at rather a late hour, the importance of being prompt. This itinerating college is our peculiar institution. It is the foundation of our success in a very important sense. If elevated to the highest standard, as is being gradually done, I do not see that we shall need any special theological seminary for the training of ministers. In his essay on "The Aversion of Men of Taste to Evangelical Religion," Mr. Foster assigns the "peculiarity of language" by which divines become "barbarous" as a prevalent reason of the unacceptability of their teachings. And so we think the mind and manners of many a hopeful aspirant to ministerial usefulness have been rendered "barbarous" by having been cast in the remorseless mould of a theological curriculum. This effect is almost inevitable and practically invariable. Preachers ought not to be separated from the language, the manners and the hearts of men. This common sense, this knowledge of human nature, is as essential as the analogy of dogmatic theology and the philological exegesis of the original Hebrew and Greek. It is getting to be as important, too, to know the Satanic as the divine element in literature. Let not our ministering call to ecclesiastic be underrated. Let our young men be abreast with the times in the classics and sciences and metaphysics. Let them explore the solitudes of academic groves; let them seek the muses in their own favorite haunts; let them wrestle with the fires of science and learn its most subtle and beautiful illustrations from the hands of a professor; let them go forth with the commendatory indorsement, "Semper ad eundem," and then let them bring all their honors to the feet of Jesus, and submit to be questioned and instructed by some of His most unpretending disciples.—These thoughtful, prayerful, experienced committee-men are qualified instructors. They first learned and then became teachers.—This is a specialty of our college. It keeps up a corps of professors from its own students. I was once present when a young preacher offered himself for examination on Watson's Institutes and Blair's Rhetoric.

Committee—Have you studied these subjects?

Candidate—Well, yes, in a general way. I feel that I am posted in theology, and I have understood rhetoric for years.

Committee—Are you ready for examination?

Candidate—Of course; I am here for that purpose.

One of the committee, who had not only tasted, but, according to "my Lord Bacon," had "chewed, swallowed and digested" Richard Watson, commenced plying him with direct, simple, well-meant questions. He hesitated, scratched his head, turned uneasily in his chair, was surprised, mortified, humbled, and requested the examination to stop. When Blair was mentioned he plucked up courage, and his embarrassment evidently subsided. He had been a collegian, a teacher, a lawyer, may be an editor, and he felt "at home." At first he held his ground fairly, but when the delicate distinctions and specific definitions of the accomplished author came to be discussed, he found himself at a loss again, and with some confusion excused himself from further interrogation, and desired the committee not to report him at all, but to allow him another year on the same course. He gracefully acknowledged "that he had been heady and conceited," and promised to profit by the lesson of the evening.

We would not hold these class rooms in terrorem over our novitiates, but we would bring them to a just appreciation of them. The thoughtful members of a Conference hear the reports from these quarters with decisive interest, and I would not say too harsh, perhaps, to affirm that a preacher's character in his Conference is dated from these reports.

After looking in on the boys, we proceed very patriarchally to the appointed rendezvous, that we may meet and greet our brethren as they arrive. Like other such, preachers have their special friendships. They have their "bosom cronies," with whom they love to confer and "take sweet counsel together," with whom they can rejoice and with whom they can weep, whom they can reprove and from whom they can receive reproof. These endearing relations, however, are too sacred to be dragged into observation, and are not seen at the rendezvous, on the first meeting, unless in some ineffably delicate expression, such as Joseph made when he doubled Benjamin's mess. Rather, we have the hearty salute of the hail-fellow, the honest, cordial shake of the craft, the off-hand parry and thrust of the raining jest, and the laughter-beaming countenance of the benevolent fraternity. The maxim is, Ridet quid-quid est domi cichinorum. When these light sallies are over the crowd disperses, and "bosom cronies" trip off to their rooms to take a talk sub rosa.

All that we know of these witnesses establishes their virtuous and sober character.

2. As they had no wish and made no attempt to deceive others, so they were not deceived themselves. It was not in regard to opinions and theories that they testified, but facts—what they knew and had seen. They were the familiar and daily associates of Christ for several years. They were constant eye-witnesses. They saw the water in the firkins turned to wine as it was poured out and borne to the Master of the feast. They saw the notorious blind beggar of Jericho, who sat and begged, receive his sight. They saw the few small loaves and little fish magnified, and the five thousand fed—they gathered up the twelve baskets of fragments. They saw the son of the widow of Nain, as he was borne along the public street by his mother's neighbors to the grave, raised from the dead. They saw Lazarus as he came forth in the presence of many from the tomb. They saw Christ apprehended. They saw him the [illegible] cross. They saw him the [illegible] day, and at various times for many days after the resurrection. They saw him whom he took them [illegible] as for as Bethany, on the Mt. of Olives, and in full day publicly ascend to heaven. They heard him with their own ears in hundreds of discourses and conversations. So that they had the best and fullest opportunity to know the certainty whereof they affirmed. They narrated what others saw and heard. They had been [illegible] the scene of the country in [illegible] the [illegible] to go, or had said that they knew not what they testified. If a witness be [illegible] interest in making his story [illegible] If it can be proved that a witness [illegible] pleasure, profit, [illegible] by his story, then their testimony

"ECCE HOMO."

PART I.—NO. II.

The [illegible] is thing [illegible] this work from the side of [illegible] Christian belief is, that it exalts our Lord in His [illegible], or on the ground of divine greatness and [illegible] as has been observed, probably those who urge this objection would follow it up by urging that the Old Christ-name among us as a compound of truth" is to be "rightly [illegible] divided," that the several points of religion ought to be exhibited in their due proportions, that the severance of its limbs is fatal to its vitality, that the license to teach half-truths is all that falsehood can desire, and that, in point of fact, all the havoc made by error has been effected by the use of this very method.

Now the answer to this reasoning, so far as it is of a general character, appears to be obvious enough. The teaching of half truths is, indeed, indefensible and mischievous, when they are brought as whole truths. But there is an order and succession in the process of instruction, and that which is not good as a resting place may be excellent and most necessary as a stage in an onward journey. It was not at the commencement of His career, but it was on the very evening of His passion that our Lord himself was pleased to say to His disciples, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." Indeed, the negation of this principle would throw every established method of acquiring knowledge into confusion, and if carried out [illegible] would condemn the [illegible] standing to [illegible] sterility. For the [illegible] the parts of a subject must be presented at once can only be [illegible] reveal to [illegible] view all that is really elevated and advanced, by dwelling perpetually in the circle of the most rudimentary forms which are at once exuberant and stunted.

Let us allow, then, that the author of "Ecce Homo" approaches the character of our Saviour on its human side exclusively. This may be and as nearly an equivalent to exhibiting our Lord only in His nature. The difference between the two will presently, perhaps, become more visible. For the present it may be enough to deal with the objection only in the first named of these two forms. When so stated, the assertion it involves may be true. But the grave question remains, is it really a just objection? Can no work which confines itself to approaching the character of our Saviour on its human side, have its most and proper office in the Christian teaching of this or of any period of Christian experience? Or would it be too bold to assert in direct opposition to such an opinion that, while such a mode of treatment is open to no insurmountable preliminary objection, it is one eminently suited to the religious exigencies of the present times? Further still, If it will be well accommodated to the needs of the time in which we live, does it purchase that accommodation by the sacrifice of anything which more permanent needs would require? Does it involve a departure from the spirit of the original and great evangelium of the gospels themselves? Nay, does it involve a departure from their very form?

In order to answer these questions aright we must humbly endeavor to consider what was, in fact, according to the gospels, the mode and process of manifestation chosen in order to open up the room of that which St. Paul so aptly describes as "the mystery" of God, and to introduce to the world that Messiah for whom not only the pious and the worldly among the Hebrews, each according to his own conception, were in active longing, but whom, as we know from heathen sources, "an ancient and constant opinion rife throughout the East" taught even the common run of men to expect. For this was no light question, no question of a meteor flitting or flaring across the sky, mounting in fire, and then descending into gloom. No question of an appeal to the rough and ready strength of passions and of prejudices, which, stroked and organized with skill, might have changed the surface, not the surface only, of society. The astounding fact of the manifestation of the Lord of Glory in the veil of human flesh may, and does, stagger in some minds the whole faculty of belief. Those minds, however, guided by equity, will admit that if this great Christian postulate be sound, much must follow from it. For then we must reason expect to find not only an elaborate preparation in the outer world for an event which, by the very statement of the terms, dwarfs the dimensions of every other known transaction, but likewise a most careful adjustment of the

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

NEW IBERIA — LA. CONFERENCE.

Next to Selma stands New Iberia in this opening campaign. The preacher in charge, who is also the Presiding Elder of the Opelousas district, sends twenty new subscribers. The army-wave passed over New Iberia thirteen times. It has seen all the hard times—all that ever have been seen anywhere. These subscribers come up out of the ashes of the war. Some people stay in the ashes and some turn to ashes; but the people of New Iberia renew their strength, and take the ADVOCATE. This is the best course of the three. Though there are people, Southern Methodists at that, who prefer either of the other two. We have a great pity for them. How can a man expect ever to hope and smile again, or to shake off his sackcloth, who will not strain a point, throw up the window, and let in the joyful light of the religious world upon his family, by subscribing to the ADVOCATE?

Brother Goodwyn is determined to bless his people with the blessed light of Christian intelligence, whether or no. It occurs to us that this fatherly care for a people is the true type of pastoral efficiency. Misfortune and losses turn many men into children; they don't know what they want. The preacher must rise above the times, think for them, and, so far as he can, by all methods, sow light and gladness.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS—CHANGE OF PRICE.—The sales of the first mortgage bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company have recently been so rapid and extensive that the full amount which the company had proposed to sell at the original price of 95 and interest, has been marketed, and the price has been advanced to par and accrued interest.

The progress of the road, the prosperous condition of the company's affairs, their abundant cash resources, and high credit, would seem to fully justify the advance in the price of their first mortgage bonds, and to afford a sufficient guarantee of an active demand at the advanced rate.

METHODIST EDUCATORS.

Our colleges, academies, and schools must be maintained at all cost. They constitute the fortresses by which we hold our position, and about which our forces rally. We cannot afford to abandon one—no, not one—nor to weaken its garrison. And the attack upon Protestant Christianity is nowhere severer than at these points. To yield them up to the enemy would be tantamount to a general surrender. It may take the very flesh off our bones to keep these Methodist institutions in working trim, but that is far preferable to going down, bones and all. The Southern Conferences and people have a powerful aid in the corps of teachers who fill the chairs of these schools, and undergo the badly requited toil which hourly their hands find to do. Excepting itinerant preachers, no men in our churches are making greater sacrifices in the discharge of duty. Hundreds of them have been called to preach, but doubtless have made this compromise with the Divine suggestion, to go if not into the Lord's vineyard, yet into the Lord's nursery. Humanly speaking, they did not make much by the bargain; indeed we had rather get on a horse and ride half the day in the rain, and lose a pair of saddle-bags in a swollen creek, in order to preach to a shivering handful, in an open log half-and-half-school-and-meeting-house, than to encounter endless relays of rude boys, and enter forever upon the task of shaping the "old Adam" out of them, and infusing the nobly-trained spirit of a good man into them, and of polishing them up to the elevated standard of one of our college graduates. We speak only for one; but probably some prefer anything to riding over the country and preaching everywhere "like a crazy beggar." Well, we will have no argument, as Providence has mercifully shut men's eyes to the mercies no less than to the miseries of their fellows; and a call to preach is not so much a call to that thing, as it is a call from everything else.

These men are called to teach, than which there is no higher call of God in the way of duty. "He gave some teachers"—why not this very sort?—men devoted, through weal and woe, to the training of youth for Christ and the church. We know men in this calling who are avowedly preachers, able preachers of the New Testament, and others who are not avowedly, but whose "talk" on a Sabbath and other days often boils over into a good sermon. Now this is the secret why they go threadbare, and work so uncomplainingly for such a pittance, because they have upon them the burden of these youth, their present and future spiritual as well as temporal welfare. And we know of no laborer in any part of God's field who, if faithful, reaps so surely, so speedily, and so large a harvest—we might add so visible—as the one who for a long period of years devotes himself to this immortal toil. In the course of ten years he impresses society; in twenty he sees that he has not only sent forth streams of influence, but his scholars, many of them, have already become independent fountains, sending out their own threads of silvery life to bless and beautify the land. Take for instance such men as Dr. Alexander, of Princeton, or Dr. Fisk, of the Wesleyan University; great as they were as preachers, the work they accomplished as teachers was vastly greater. By and by, all the anxiety and worry of a teacher is repaid not only in the consciousness of having done his duty, but in the admiration and love which pupils ever entertain for a faithful instructor—an admiration only less than that which a converted soul feels for the minister who brought him to Christ.

THE GRETNA CHURCH.

We are still "waiting, waiting," and not wholly in vain. Thirty dollars more came in this week, very handsomely, toward saving this beautiful church from the all-devouring Yankee maw; leaving a balance of $600 yet to be made up.

The following neat letter, inclosing the money, was handed to us by one of the manly, open-hearted, bright-eyed donors:

REV. J. C. KEENER — Dear Sir: We belong to the Methodist Sunday school of the Carondelet street church. Father and mother do not believe in the holding of fairs, bazaars or tombolas for religious purposes, as they are a species of gambling, and so we could not attend the fair for the benefit of the Gretna Church. We herewith each donate ten ($10) dollars from our own savings to relieve the church of its debt, and also give two ($2) dollars each for the China Mission.

Your's respectfully,
S. T. MURRAY,
J. H. MURRAY,
R. B. MURRAY.

It is delightful to see youths trained to give in support of the church and gospel. Habits of economy and industry should always be perfected by the habit of conscientious giving.

When one objects to a fair, he should, as these good friends have done, back his objection with a good round sum, given in the legitimate, straightforward way. It adds much to the weight of the objection. We agree with the views of the parents of our young friends, and are opposed to all these gambling contrivances for making church fairs profitable. We think that in that respect this Gretna fair was an exception. It was conducted in a way that could give no offense to any.

We saw there venerable Methodist class leaders, and ruling Presbyterian elders, walking up and down, enjoying the fellowship of kindred minds, and making the place cheerful with hearty mutual Christian sympathy. Still we do not argue, nor stand strongly upon this style of benevolence, and are ready to hear and weigh all objections that are well sustained. We hope that more will be urged this week.

THE CHURCH AT ALGIERS.

This is one of the important outposts of Southern Methodism in New Orleans. During the war this house fell into bad condition. After extricating it from the benevolent clutches of a Northern Methodist bishop, the first thing needed was fumigation, the next repair. The people over there are only a little less poor than the Gretna congregation. They have raised all the money they could to revive the proper expression of their "holy and beautiful house." But after doing all, they still have a steeple that leaks, and a debt of some $250 for paint. Their resource is one single steward, a most faithful man, and the exhaustless benevolence of our Methodist people. Now, strange as it may seem, the suggestion of the Gretna fair took its rise in the intention and previous arrangement of the Algiers church for holding a fair, and thus appealing to their friends in that place and this city. The success of the Gretna fair has greatly inspired them; they have generous promises of help from the members of other churches, and from gentlemen individually, to aid in a concert and in an exhibition of dissolving scenes to accompany the fair. It takes place on Tuesday next, the 18th instant, at the St. Charles Hall, Algiers. The ferry-boat runs all night; the walks are paved with brick from the ferry-boat to the hall. Tickets can be had at 112 Camp street, or of the Sunday school superintendents of our city churches. We hope that all things will be ordered and conducted as soberly, as tastefully, and as unexceptionably as they were at the Masonic Hall. It continues several nights.

DR. CHALMERS was wont to say, a house-going minister makes a church-going people, as the people are sure to show the courtesy of returning the minister's week-day visits by their Sabbath-day attendance

"RECONSTRUCTION."

This word has acquired a new force during the past two years, and now there is scarcely any in the language which contains and expresses so much disregard for law, and so much intentional damage to the welfare, political and social, of the whole country. But, as if even the word could not hold enough, we now hear of a "re-reconstruction," or reconstruction reconstructed. Two years of Congressional legislation have revolved upon it; and by it the attention of the North and South equally has been diverted from what is really transpiring. The party in power are now spending the incredible sum of one million of dollars a day, solely upon the army and the bureau; and how much of this finds its way, through the mysterious channels of contracts, into the hands of its friends, can be imagined. We cannot wonder at the manifest wish to take time, and do this work of "reconstruction" thoroughly; that upon the least pretext Congress so patiently tears down and builds up again States, conventions, constitutions, and governments. Sooner than see this great idea of "reconstruction" fail, it is proposed to sacrifice the Constitution, the Supreme Court, and the President; to tax the baby at the breast, the negro in the field, the horse in the mill; to destroy full one-half of the exports, and a larger proportion of the productive power of the whole country; to overwhelm the present generation with immeasurable extravagance, and to entail upon their children a debt intolerable to bear, and impossible of discharge.

We find General Sheridan was full of the same idea. Whatever obstructed "reconstruction" could not be removed too speedily; while aldermen were changed to black ones, and white schools were to be transformed into mixed ones simply to realize a word. General Mower was well nigh possessed with the conception as with an evil spirit. He removed all obstacles, impediments, and hindrances: judges, clerks, sheriffs, aldermen, and lesser fry. They all went down before the great idol of the party.

It was this controlling thought that shaped the conduct of General Grant in accepting the "office of Secretary of War ad interim. He did it, it seems, in furtherance of the one great radical idea:

"From our conversation and my written protest of August 1st, 1867, against the removal of Mr. Stanton, you must have known my greatest objection to his removal was the fear that some one would be appointed in his stead who would, by opposition to the laws relating to the restoration of the Southern States to their proper relations to the government, embarrass the army in the performance of the duties especially imposed upon it by law, and that it was to prevent such an appointment that I accepted the appointment of Secretary of War ad interim, and not for the purpose of enabling you to get rid of Mr. Stanton."—Letter to the President, Feb. 3.

What "reconstruction" will be, when it comes, is now the wonder. An idea, the very conception and shaping of which has cost the country the loss of hundreds of millions, changed the great commercial tides of the world, depopulated the fertile lowlands of the valley of the Mississippi, and brought several millions of people to the verge of starvation, may well be looked for, in its completed and perfected expression, with undisguised alarm. Whoever and whatever fairly survives and lives through this political cyclone, called "reconstruction," may be counted thrice fortunate.

WHAT are allowable amusements? Such recreations, and such alone, as may, in some degree, assist our faculties of mind and body to perform that great work for which they were united, and placed in this probationary world. No amusements are allowable which produce weariness of body or lassitude of mind; which indispose us for serious thought and feeling; which keep us cold and indifferent respecting wisdom and virtue; which break down the barriers between us and the vices and follies of the world, or which leave behind them a disrelish for the close inspection of our hearts, and for devotional intercourse with our God:

ALMANACS.

We have received from their publishers three admirable almanacs, for 1868, each most excellent of its kind.

The World Almanac, issued at the office of the World newspaper, No. 35 Park Row, New York, is full of political information, and contains the officers of State governments, and the acts of general Congress, and the detail figures of the recent elections, general and State.

The Democratic Almanac, by Van Evrie, Horton & Co., No. 162 Nassau street, New York. Contents: Restoration of Democracy, History of the St. Domingo Massacre, Our Federal System Overthrown, The Reconstruction Measures of Congress, the President's Veto of the Reconstruction Bill, The President's Proclamation, Our Financial Condition, Monthly Range of Gold Market from 1862 to 1867, States of the Union and Population, State Elections, etc., etc., Official Election Returns for 1867, The Impeachment Project, Foreign States. Price, single copies, 20 cents; seven copies, $1; fifteen copies, $2, post-paid. By express, $12 per hundred.

The American Ecclesiastical Almanac. By Fred'k Gerhard, Post Box 4,001, or 15 Dey street, New York. Price, 30 cents. This is full of all ecclesiastical statistics of America, Asia, Europe, Africa and Australia, The Creeds of the World, Foreign Missions, Councils, Alliances, Societies, Conventions, Associations, Synods, Movements, Schools, and Pan Anglicans. All and more than one can imagine in the way of church statistical information.

But we miss in all of them the old man with his legs stretched out like the statue at Rhodes. They tell not when the moon is in apogee or in perigee; when to kill a hog, or catch a crab, or plant a cabbage; when it is safe to vaccinate, or operate, or mask. In fact, the moon in its effects upon men, and cattle, and gardens, and soap-making, and meat-boiling is entirely ignored by these modern almanac makers. "The influence of the moon upon the weather" is however recognized in the World Almanac, and we shall publish it at length. We have always found it a good thing to pitch a quarterly meeting, or a camp meeting, or a protracted meeting about the full of the moon, because the chances of fair weather are greater at that time than any other in the month. One always feels more knowing when the almanac is hanging over the mantle piece by a string through one corner, and within easy reach. It is a sort of clock which points to the time of eclipses, tides, quarterings, risings and settings of the mysterious worlds above, and the flow of the unseen currents around us, all which, otherwise, we should live in ignorance, or hold them in superstitious dread. To the common mind it vindicates the endless figurings of science and the hidden love of musty-looking star-gazers. It is a tremendous twenty cents' worth.

E. L. PIERSON & CO.

"Honor to whom honor, praise to whom praise," etc. Unsolicited we pay a tribute to those men of the North who are ready to do all in their power to assuage the angry feelings and the distress incident to the recent war. Among them we reckon this house of New York, and its branch in this city, No. 27 Magazine street. We believe that Mr. Pelved formerly in New Orleans. During the Southern General Conference, held here nearly two years ago, this house gave us nineteen suits of clothing to different members of that venerable body. If any one is disposed to ask for the moving cause of this generosity, we answer: "By their fruits ye shall know them—men do not gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles." It was a kind and powerful way to manifest good will of many good people; but was it not also the proper way, and one that was equally open to all? Such large minded, generous-hearted men, whether in a social or business point of view, deserve to be patronized. It is never too late to do justice.

"The Morning Star and Catholic Messenger."

The first number of this new weekly, published in this city, appeared on Sabbath morning last. It is in quarto form, about the size of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. It is the property of a joint stock company, under the control of four ministers and three laymen. Archbishop Odin is the president of the company. There are 5,000 shares of stock, at $20 a share. Every church needs an organ to support its faith and its people. The great number of Catholics in this city will insure its success. The editorial articles in the first number are temperate in tone, neat in style, vigorous in thought, and are evidently from a practiced pen. The general appearance of the paper is very creditable. Price, $4 per annum.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The President's rejoinder to Gen. Grant, and accompanying statements of members of the Cabinet, were read in the House this afternoon, and listened to by the members and spectators with undivided attention. The President's letter did not excite any special remark during the reading, but the letters of Messrs. Welles, McCulloch and Seward were greeted with outbursts of laughter on the Republican side of the House. The first two excited the risibles by reason of their brevity and sweeping indorsement of the general statements of the President, and the letter of Mr. Seward provoked merriment by reason of what the members termed its Sewardisms, its diplomatic character, and here and there non committal phraseology.

Gen. Grant has ordered Gen. Hancock to set aside the order reorganizing the New Orleans Councils. To this Hancock respectfully takes exception, and telegraphs Grant that unless the latter revokes his order he (Hancock) must ask to be relieved of the command of the Fifth Military District.

It is given out that Gen. George B. McClellan will be nominated to be Minister to England. Whilst there is no official authorization for such announcement, it may be said, nevertheless, it has been known for some days that the President had such nomination under consideration.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—Advices from Abyssinia state that a strong force of British troops advanced from Senafe toward the interior on the 26th of January. Water had been bored for according to the American plan, and found in abundance near the English line of march. The coasts have been lighted by the English for naval purposes. The camp followers from India were being returned home.

The Egyptian governor of Quassonah was recalled, it is said, with the approval of the British authorities.

NEW YORK, Feb. 9.—Cable specials say Napoleon altered his policy toward the Pope and Italy in a sudden and remarkable manner. He evinces a disposition to abandon the position of champion of the holy see, assured, it is said, of the existence of Bourbon intrigues radiating from Rome. The imperial diplomacy with Rome has become colder, while friendly relations hitherto existing with Victor Emmanuel are to be renewed.

Isabella is forced to dissolve the papal legion which were being recruited under her warrant in Madrid, as Napoleon flatly objects to its service in the cause of the holy see.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—It is understood that Edwards' bill prescribing the proceedings in impeachments will be pressed to-morrow. It provides for suspension during trial by a two-thirds' vote.

The publication of the President's letter is universal.

Raining here nearly all day.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—Gen. McClellan is spoken of in connection with the mission to England.

The following is Sherman's bill, which was introduced to-day and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas, the people of the State of Alabama have in strict compliance with the fifth section of the act of March 2, 1867, entitled an "act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States," formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States, framed by the convention of delegates in compliance with said act; and

Whereas, said constitution has been ratified by a majority of the qualified persons voting on the question of ratification, and said constitution contains all the guarantees required by said act; therefore,

Be it enacted and declared by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the State of Alabama is entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law.

The noon dispatches regarding Grant and Hancock's correspondence is substantially correct. Further details are inaccessible.

Grant and Stanton had a prolonged interview to-day.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—The correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, who is also an officer of the White House, telegraphs the following: "Gen. Grant has ordered General Hancock to set aside the order reorganizing the New Orleans City Council.

To this Gen. Hancock respectfully takes exception, and telegraphs Gen. Grant that, unless the latter revokes his order, he, Hancock, must ask to be relieved from the command of the Fifth Military District.

Upon a full investigation of the facts, Gen. Grant has declined to interfere in the matter of the recent removals of members of the City Council.

This statement will be received with great satisfaction by the public, who have been alarmed by the publication of our special telegraph from Washington on this subject. That telegram represented the incomplete action of the General. Since it was dispatched to us, he has concluded not to interfere in the matter.—N. O. Times.

MARRIED.

On the 26th January, 1868, by the Rev. Joseph D. Newsom, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mr. H. J. JOHNSON to Miss LAURA LAFURE, of Holmes county, Mississippi.

By the same, February 2, 1868, at the residence of the bride, Mr. JAMES S. PENCELL to Miss FANNIE M. COLE, all of Carroll county, Mississippi.

OBITUARIES.

Mr. JOHN P. FULLER, Esq., was born at Lumberton, North Carolina, May 29, 1834. He graduated at Randolph Macon College, Virginia, in 1852. In February, 1858, he was married to the daughter of Dr. Wm. A. Smith. He studied law and became a successful practitioner in his native State and county. In 1861 he was elected a member of the North Carolina State Convention. During the great States rights war he served sometimes in the army, and sometimes as chief clerk in the Confederate States Treasury at Richmond. Exposure and hardships developed a pulmonary affection. In December last he came to this city, on his way to Florida, with the hope of improving his health, but debility arrested further travel. On my first visit he said "it was time that he was attending to the interest of his soul, though he had never permitted himself to doubt the truth of revelation." After some visits, at his request he was formally and solemnly received into the church by the assumption of his baptismal faith and vows. The next day he partook of the holy communion. His strength rapidly failed, and on Sunday morning, the 9th of February, he calmly fell asleep. Before he died, on being asked if he was prepared to meet God, he calmly replied, "he hoped he was."

A bereaved wife and three children, with a wide circle of friends, mourn his loss.

Died, in Milton, Florida, on the 2d of January, 1868, Miss LIZZIE J. KEYSER, in the twenty-seventh year of her age. Much could be said in praise of the subject of this notice. Endowed with a good mind, improved by good scholastic opportunities, and stored with varied reading, her conversation was at once interesting and attractive. No one could converse with her without being impressed with the presence of more than ordinary intellect. While away from home at school she became a member of the Episcopal church, and although, after her return she never identified herself with any church, we are fully satisfied she never forgot the vows she had assumed. She was not very demonstrative in her religious experience, but was a punctual attendant on public worship, and never neglected an opportunity of commemorating the sufferings and death of her Saviour. As a Sabbath school teacher she was almost unsurpassed, and gathered around her the largest class of the school in which she taught. In the sick room she had but few equals. Many a long, weary night has she kept her sleepless vigils by the bedside of the sick and the dying, with the hand of affection ministering to their wants, and alleviating their sufferings. The home of which, in her respective sphere, she presided, exhibited her industry and rare domestic qualifications. She certainly possessed some of the characteristics of Solomon's perfect woman, of whom it is said: "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

Her sickness was of a protracted and complicated nature, but she bore it with patience and resignation; and from her first attack her demeanor assumed that mild and subdued taciturnity which seemed to be the harbinger of approaching dissolution. Seeing that her feet were fast going down into the cold waters of death, and that speech was difficult, a friend who held her hand asked her if she could trust God in that trying hour, and if she could, to press her hand. She immediately and firmly grasped the hand of her friend. Portions of the hymns: "Jesus, lover of my soul," and "There is a land of pure delight," were quoted to her. She assented to their comforting truths by again pressing the hand of her friend. Before speech failed she said: "I am happy." At about nine o'clock on Thursday morning her spirit took its flight. She was cut down in the bloom of young womanhood, furnishing another verification of the solemn truth: "In the midst of life we are in death."

"Leaves have their time to fall,
Flowers to wither at the North wind's breath,
And stars to set—but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O death!"

W. B. D.

Died, in Warren county, North Carolina, at ten minutes past 6 o'clock A. M., on the 10th of January, 1868, ENDORA THORNE, daughter of Pempe Davis and Wm. W. Thorne, and wife of Alfred Alston.

Few have ever passed from death into life who so fully exhibited the sublime truth of the power of Christianity over death. Says a noble Christian woman, who was kneeling by her bedside just as the angels claimed her, and who saw the sweet smiles upon her face, "how gladly would I, were it God's will, have taken her place!" Her sun has set, a sunset upon the morn to rise in lovelier array:

"No lingering of the declining light,
To vanish back again to night,
The zenith where she now shall glow,
No beam of setting sun shall know."

A SAD BROTHER.

PRICE ADVANCED—PAR AND INTEREST.

The Central Pacific Railroad,

THE BEST AND PRINCIPAL PORtion of the NATIONAL TRUNK LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT, is being rapidly carried forward by an unprecedented working force, and it is reasonably certain that the continuous overland railroad connection from New York to San Francisco will be made in 1870.

The United States Government furnishes, upon subordinate and contingent lien, half the means for constructing the main stem line; and besides an absolute grant of 12,800 acres of valuable public lands per mile, the Central Pacific Railroad Company have received from California sources donations and concessions worth more than $1,000,000. The available resources of this company are therefore abundant for the purpose, amounting to $77,000,000 on the first 726 miles of the line, including loans secured by a first mortgage upon the whole property, to the same amount only as the United States subsidy bonds.

The results already attained, although under comparatively unfavorable circumstances, afford substantial ground for believing the Central Pacific to be the Most Favored, Productive and Valuable Railroad Enterprise in the Country.

In consequence of the large and rapidly increasing demand, the price of these bonds has been advanced, and the company are now offering for sale a limited amount of their

First Mortgage Six per Cent. Bonds,

Principal and interest payable in gold coin, in sums of $1,000 each, at par, and accrued interest from January 1st, in currency.

These bonds, it is believed, possess the elements of safety, reliability and profit in a greater degree than any other class of corporate securities now offered, and are therefore very desirable for steady investments of surplus capital.

Investors will bear in mind the following advantages:

I. They are the first mortgage on one of the most valuable and productive lines of railroad in the world.

II. The actual earnings from local business in 1867 were more than four times the annual interest engagements.

III. The hard part of the work is now done, and the prospects of rapid completion are favorable.

IV. The company have liberal subsidies, which enable them to prosecute the work with great vigor.

V. The management has been exceedingly prudent and frugal.

VI. There is already a large and growing settlement on the completed and graded line.

VII. The lands promise to be of immense value. 37,738 acres having been already sold.

VIII. Both principal and interest are explicitly made payable in gold coin.

IX. Both the aggregate amount of issue and their standing in Europe will insure for them continued activity and a high rank among standard securities.

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of from ten to fifteen per cent in addition.

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return Express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

STRAYED FROM THE FLOCK.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, GENT."

The wind goes sobbing
Over the moor;
Far is thy fold, and night is dour;
While and still!—be cold terror or shock—
Lies the foolish lamb that strayed from the flock,
While overhead from the frozen branch,
With a fiercer pity, true and staunch,
Thus sings the rook:

"The wind howls heavy
With death and sorrow;
To-day it is thee—may it be to-morrow;
Yet I'll sing one tune o'er the silent wold,
For the little lamb that never grew old;
Never lived long winters to see,
Chaunting from empty boughs like me,
Boughs once so leafy.

"The snow-flakes cover
The moorland dun;
My song trills feebly, but I sing on;
Why did God make me a brave bird soul,
Under warm feathers red as a coal,
To keep my life thus cheery and bright,
To the very last twinkle of wintry night,
While thine is all over?

"Why was I given
Bold, strong wings,
To bear me away from hurtful things,
While thy poor feet were so tender and weakly,
And thy faint heart gave up all so meekly,
Till it yielded at length to a still, safe hand,
That bade thee lie down, nor try to stand?
Was it the hand of Heaven?

"The wind goes sobbing;"
(Thus sang the bird,
Or else in a dream his voice I heard;)
"Nothing I know, and nothing can;
Wisdom is not for me, but man;
Yet some snow pure, snow soft—not snow cold—
May be staging o'er the lamb strayed from the fold,
Besides poor robin."

From the Children's Hour.

THE TRAVELER'S FRIEND.

BY UNCLE HERBERT.

'Tell me about this tree, sister Mary!' said little Harvey, holding up his picture-book. 'It looks just like a fan, or a peacock's tail.'

Sister Mary laid down her work and took the book from Harvey's hand.

'Oh, this is the 'Traveler's Friend,' and grows on the island of Madagascar,' she replied; 'and a wonderful tree it is; for it not only gives water to thirsty travelers, but cups to drink from, and plates, dishes, table-cloths, and a great deal more besides. Indeed, some of the people on the island actually build their houses and furnish them with this tree.'

'Cups, and spoons, and table-cloths, houses and furniture! I guess that's a traveler's story, as I heard papa say yesterday.'

'It's true as I say, Harvey. Now let me tell you all about it. You see one man holding a cup and another with a rod in his hand?'

'Yes.'

'And you see the broad leaves and the long stems?'

'Yes.'

'Well, after sunset the dew gathers on the leaves of this tree and runs in little streams down the long branches, at the bottom of each one of which is a large hollow place, where it collects, and is held in by one branch lying tightly over another. The traveler has only to thrust a stick in between the branches, as you see in the picture, and lift one of the over-lapping sides, when out will flow the water like a stream from a tiny fountain. It is pure and cool, with only a slight taste of the leaf.'

'Isn't that nice!' exclaimed Harvey. 'And now,' he went on, 'tell me about the spoons, and plates, and furniture, and table-cloths.'

Sister Mary smiled pleasantly as she answered:

'The spoons, and plates, and table-cloths are not exactly like those we used at breakfast-time this morning; still the natives are very well satisfied with them. Look at the leaf on the end of each branch. How long do you think these leaves are?'

'May be a foot,' said Harvey.

'They are several feet long and quite broad. Large enough to cover you all over like a blanket.'

'Oh, I wish I had one.'

'It wouldn't be of much use to you,' replied sister Mary. 'But then you don't live in Madagascar. Now these leaves are gathered in large quantities, and sold every morning in the markets. The people use them as table-cloths, or cut them in smaller pieces for dishes and plates, and even fold them into the shapes of spoons and cups, and use them as lading and drinking vessels.'

'I guess they are not very rich people who do this,' said Harvey.

'No; they are the natives who live on the eastern side of the island. This singular tree is also called 'The Builder's Tree,' because the natives make of its long stems the partitions and often the sides of their houses. Then the hard outer bark is stripped from the inner and softer part, and having been beaten out flat, is laid down for flooring.'

'Anything more?' asked Harvey, who was beginning to feel amused at the many and singular uses of his tree.

'Yes; they have a kind of cotton used.

[illegible] rubber cloth.'

'I guess you say, on the [illegible] of Madagascar. Who [illegible] and?'

'Madagascar lies a little way from the southeast part of Africa, and is larger than Great Britain. The people, in number about five millions, are heathen and ignorant. They have a king or queen. There are no wide carriage roads through the island, but many paths, and travelers have to be carried in palanquins on people's shoulders. When you are older you will study geography, which is a very interesting study, and learn more about this island, and many other remarkable places in the world.'

'I wish we had a 'Traveler's Friend' in our garden,' said Harvey, as he shut his picture-book. 'Wouldn't I have a grand time building houses and making all kinds of nice things?'

FARM AND GARDEN.

From the American Agriculturist.

THE "NEW FORAGE PLANT."

Lespedeza Striata.

For some time past the papers published at the South, both agricultural and others, have had accounts of a remarkable "new plant" which had made its appearance spontaneously and multiplied rapidly. It seems to have a wonderful vigor, as it not only occupies waste places, but has taken possession of old fields and crowded out the weeds. Even the Bermuda grass, so difficult to eradicate, disappears before it. Among the names that have been given to it is "Little Wild Clover," but it is not a clover, and it was only when specimens were sent to Prof. Gray, at Cambridge, that its proper name became known. Prof. G. determined it to be Lespedeza striata, a plant heretofore known only as a native of Japan and China. We have several native species of Lespedeza, which have the popular name of Bush Clover, and that would answer very well as a common name for this plant; at least, better than "Japan Pea," by which name it has been called in some papers. It is really neither a clover, nor a pea, though all three belong to the same family. It is supposed, by some that this plant was introduced into the Southern States during the war, but a note by Prof. Gray in the American Naturalist, for November, states that it was known to Prof. Darby, of Georgia, ten years ago; and Mr. G. H. Cartledge says in the Southern Cultivator that it was observed by him ten or twelve years ago. That a plant from such an out of the way country as Japan should make its appearance in Georgia is certainly strange, though it is not so unusual that, when once introduced, it should show great vitality and crowd out other plants; we have numerous instances of this in many other introduced plants. It is supposed that the war had much to do with the general distribution of the plant, and that the passage of cavalry and large droves of beeves aided its dissemination. The fact that in new localities it first makes its appearance along the road sides gives probability to this view. A correspondent, whose name we have unfortunately mislaid, sent us a specimen, from which we have had an engraving made, showing the top of a plant of the natural size and a seed, part magnified. The plant was first described in Thumberg's Flora of Japan (1794) as Hedysarum striatum, and afterward Hooker and Arnott, in the Botany of the Voyage of the Beechy, placed it in the related genus of Lespedeza. Hooker and Arnot describe it as an annual, as does Mr. Cartledge, above referred to; while Prof. Kains, who gives a chemical account of it in the Southern Cultivator, for November, speaks of it as a perennial. The plant grows a foot or more high, and bears three-parted leaves, which are not very abundant. The flowers are small; one is borne in the axil of each leaf and followed by a small, one-seeded pod. The agricultural value of the Lespedeza does not seem to be satisfactorily determined. Mr. Cartledge says: "It is, without doubt, a valuable plant. All kinds of stock and fowls are fond of it, and thrive well when and where it is plentiful. Chickens will scratch after the seeds and keep fat all winter where they are abundant. It will grow well in a pine thicket where nothing else will grow." Some say that it is eaten only by cattle. The chemical analysis above referred to shows that it ought be a nutritious food, but the writer thinks the woody stems will prove an obstacle to using it as cured fodder, unless it be cooked.

To us it seems that the most important aspect of the plant is the possibility that it may supply the place of clover as a crop to turn under as a fertilizer. Clover has [illegible] great void of Southern [illegible] in the Lespedeza, it [illegible] Lespedeza. We [illegible] more of the "new plant."

HATCHING FISH EGGS.

The experiments in fish breeding [illegible] and some very interesting facts in their natural history. It takes much longer to hatch the eggs of the varieties that spawn in cold water than those that are spawned in rivers during the summer. The eggs of shad, put in water of suitable temperature, produce young fish in a few days. The salmon trout eggs require a longer incubation than those of most birds. Salmon require two months or more, under the most favorable circumstances. The New England Fish Commissioners, we see by the papers, are having great luck in the hatching line, at the Charleston Springs, in New Hampshire, where they deposited 40,000 salmon eggs in October. They hatched on the 11th of December, just 62 days from the time they were taken from the parent fish. The eggs of the salmon trout, at these springs, were 35 days in hatching, which is said to be the shortest time on record in this country. The salmon eggs were taken from fish in the Miramichi, one of the best salmon rivers in New Brunswick. Our Eastern readers will be very glad to see this evidence of substantial progress in the work of restocking New England rivers with fish. It will be recollected that a very large stock of shad eggs was hatched, and turned into the Connecticut, at Hadley Falls, last spring. These, according to the programme, ought to make their appearance in that river the coming season. The annual catch of shad in the Connecticut has dwindled to about 600,000. If 50,000,000 were turned into the rivers, as reported, some ought to be very plenty and cheap next spring. For the salmon we shall have to wait longer. They are two years or more in coming to maturity, and it is proposed, we believe, by the Fish Commissioners, not to allow any to be taken from the Connecticut, except for the purpose of propagation, until 1871.

In England the work of restocking the rivers with salmon is going on successfully, and we see frequent discussion in our exchanges on topics connected with this subject. The best method of constructing fish stairs is still under discussion. Nothing better has been elicited than the plan illustrated in our last volume. It is well settled that the inclination in these stairs should not be greater than one foot in seven. These restocked rivers are affecting the price of fish, and salmon can be had in the London market for less than half what it costs in our cities. Riparian owners are in good spirits, and the papers abound in advertisements of spring salmon fishing to let. We hope to see salmon plenty very soon in this country.

WORK IN THE HORTICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.—In the recent war in Europe the Austrians burned an important bridge; the Prussian commander telegraphed to Berlin, and in a short time a duplicate bridge came with every piece numbered, and ready to put up. There was in store, at Berlin, a duplicate of every important bridge located near the seat of war. What has this to do with horticulture? The principle of being ready for every emergency has much to do with it. Head-work has quite as much to do with a campaign as hard fighting, and effective generalship tells, though perhaps in a less brilliant manner, as well in the kitchen garden as on the battle-field. An extra spade or whiffletree, and a reserve supply of seed to replant in case of failure, are as important to the gardener as an extra bridge or reserve regiment are to an army. Now is the time to anticipate accidents and provide everything that may be needed. Next month active operations will be crowding, and even now, at the South, out-of-door work is going on. Trees should be ordered at once. We learn from nurserymen that stock of some kinds is very scarce, and it may be necessary to apply to more than one dealer in order to procure the required varieties. The assortment of seeds is at its best this month, and it is well to secure them now. The same with implements; purchase the best, and have extra ones, or duplicates of parts that are liable to be broken.—American Agriculturist.

THE RINDERPEST IN BELGIUM.—An alarming eruption of this disease, it is announced, has occurred simultaneously at two points below Antwerp. The infected localities were at once put under the charge of government officials, sanitary cordons established, several animals slaughtered, and it was hoped the disease was under control.—American Agriculturist.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE HUGON GAS ENGINE.

One of the most important mechanical exhibits in the Agricultural Industry Show, this year, is the Hugon gas engine, which is exactly what its name implies—an engine, the motive power of which is obtained solely from common gas, either that supplied by the gas companies or gas manufactured from any substances, and in any manner. This engine is the invention of V. Pierre Hugon, and though discovered and patented by him in 1852, has only recently been offered to the public. The first engine invented by M. Hugon needed electricity, and required so considerable a quantity of grease as to cause the cylinder either by its own expansion to stop the engine, or to create such an amount of resistance as to clog and impede its working. This soon led M. Hugon that the complicated and delicate arrangements of electric batteries, etc., would be an insuperable objection in a workshop, and that the engine he then put must would not fulfill the object he had in view, namely, to supply to industrial occupations of every class an economical and ever-ready motive power available anywhere and free from be objectionable or unattainable.

In the engine, as now perfected, by an arrangement, the excellence of which consists in its utter simplicity, the gas, so soon as turned on, enters the cylinder, mixed in its passage with about nine times its bulk of common air. The gas having been turned on, all that is necessary to start the engine is to light two ordinary jets of gas, which in their turn light two others; these last inflame the explosive mixture of gas and air conveyed to the cylinder, and being extinguished by the explosion, are relit by the two jets fixed outside the cylinder. At the moment of explosion a very fine spray of water falls on the piston, and (the heat being then 1,200 degrees) becomes steam, thus reducing the heat and equalizing the pressure throughout the stroke, so that the engine lubricates itself by its own action. It is impossible to enumerate the advantages this engine offers. From perfect repose to full activity not two minutes elapse. It is as easily and as readily set to work as a jet of gas is lit, and is as instantly stopped, and all day and all night, or at any number of arbitrary intervals, just as its force is required, is this engine at the service of its owner.

The simplicity of this engine, combined as it is with economy, cleanliness of working, and, above all, safety, entitles it to rank the foremost of its class. Its steadiness in working is remarkable; with one hand on the piston-rod while in full work we could detect no symptom of shock from explosion, nor any unsteadiness whatever. The Hugon gas engine needs nothing whatever but the turning on of the gas to set it in full work, and requires no overlooking during the time it is employed. It continues working without stopping during all the time it is needed, and there is no danger of the remotest kind to be apprehended from its use. No combustible is used, consequently no supply of fuel is required to be kept, and no smoke issues from the engine, which neither requires skill to start it nor any attention whatever during its working. It is a remarkable circumstance that this gas engine is the only machine allowed to be put in motion in the whole show; this is at once high testimony to its safe and otherwise unobjectionable character.

The Hugon gas engine attracted considerable attention at the late Paris Exhibition, where several of them were at work. One of these engines, of 3 horse power, worked night and day during the Paris Exhibition in the Manufacture Civil et Militaire. In the annexe of general mechanics, a 1 horse engine supplied the power to the gas extractor. A ½ horse engine supplied the power to the laboratory of chemistry, Class 51; and a ½ horse engine printed all the tracts for the Foreign Mission of the Protestant Library. The Faculty of Science, the Sorbonne, has selected for purchase a 2 horse Hugon gas engine from all the motors at the exhibition. Many of these engines have now been sold all over England, and are doing their work most satisfactorily. From a careful observation of this useful engine we can well commend it to the notice of those who require an economical motive-power for occasional use, or who are prohibited from using steam power.—Mechanics' Magazine.

GOOD FOR MAINE.—A daily paper says that the Maine ladies trim a large pumpkin seed with fur, and wear it for a bonnet, the large end being worn in front, to protect the forehead. We shall welcome any style of ladies' head dress that is worn with a view to protect any part of the head. Any change must be for the better.—American Agriculturist.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and ever Baking stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to The Good Samaritan, as its light above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. The meats roasted in such an oven are always preferred to the raggery way to those baked in the stove oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, The Good Samaritan to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last issue. Several branches of the wholesale trade show a moderate degree of activity, but much less than is usual at this season. Our leading staple has been in brisk demand at rapidly advancing prices, the entire improvement since Friday evening amounting to 1½c. per lb; while the movement has been on an unusually liberal scale. Sugar and molasses have been in good request, and the former has further advanced. Several articles of Western produce also have sold at higher rates, caused by light receipts and moderate stocks in store. Nothing of any moment has been done in tobacco.

COTTON.—We stated in our last report that after an unusually large business the market closed at 15¼ to 16c. for Ordinary, 16¾ to 17 for Good Ordinary, 17¾ to 18 for Low Middling, 18¼ to 18½ for Middling, and 18¾ to — for Strict Middling, showing an advance for the week of fully ½c. The movement has continued active and prices have further improved ½c. On Saturday the morning commenced with a moderate degree of animation at the previous advance, but at a later hour more favorable accounts from Liverpool and New York gave an additional stimulus to the demand, and an active business was done at prices fully ½c. higher than previous rates, the sales summing up 7,100 bales, and Middling closing at 18½ to 18¾c. On Monday the favorable accounts from Liverpool up to Saturday evening enabled factors to advance their pretensions fully ½c., at which a moderate amount was taken, when, later accounts being still more favorable, buyers came forward with increased spirit, and the sales for the rest of the day were at figures ½c higher, the entire improvement during the day being fully ½c. per lb., and the business again amounting to 7,100 bales. On Tuesday the market opened under the favorable influence of later accounts from Liverpool and New York, and the business during the early part of the day was at an advance of ½c. on Monday's figures, but as later cable dispatches came through still more encouraging and stimulating, the demand became more active, and factors were enabled to establish a further advance of ½c., while operations were on a liberal scale, comprising 6,300 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 20,500 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 15,345 bales, against 19,452 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 4,107 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 379,943 bales, against 508,911 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 173,804 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 64,751 bales to Great Britain, of 61,070 to France, and of 107,270 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	18½ to 17¼
Good Ordinary	18 to 18¾
Low Middling	19¼ to 19½
Middling	19½ to 20
Strict Middling	— to 21½

SUGAR.—The market shows less animation since our last review, but the receipts have all been sold at full prices. The sales comprise 650 hhds., at 10c. per lb. for Inferior, 13½ to 13⅝ for Good Common to Fair, 13¾ to 14 for Good Fair, 14 to 14¼ for Fully Fair, 14⅜ to 14¾ for Prime, 15 to 15¼ for Choice, 15 to 16 for Yellow Clarified, 16¼ to 16¾ for White Clarified, and 14 for Seconds.

MOLASSES.—The demand exhibits less activity, yet the receipts have all been sold at about previous prices, comprising 950 barrels at 70 to 80c. per gallon for Good Fermenting, 80 for Centrifugal, not fermenting, 85 for Prime, not fermenting, 90 for Choice, not fermenting, and 82½ to 90 for Prime reboiled.

FLOUR.—The market has not shown much animation since our last review. There were sales, on Saturday and Monday of 3,000 barrels, at prices ranging from $9 25 to $15 50 per bbl, as to quality.

NEW ILLUSTRATED
OVER 3000 FINE ENGRAVINGS.
10,000 Words and Meanings not in other Dictionaries.

A necessity to every intelligent family, student, teacher and professional man. What Library is complete without the best English Dictionary?

The work is the richest book of information in the world. There is probably more real education in it than can be bought for the same amount of money in any language. Every parsonage should have a copy at the expense of the parish. It would improve many pulpits more than a trip to Europe, and at a much less cost.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Lay it upon your table by the side of the Bible; it is a better expounder than many which claim to be expounders.—M. Ch. Boat.

BISHOP SIMPSON says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the best Magazines published for children."

BISHOP STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"I believe that its introduction into every household would prove a blessing to young and old.

REV. GEO. D. BOARDMAN says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"I am delighted with 'The Children's Hour.' I do not see how a more entertaining, instructive or profitable Magazine could be put in the hands of our children."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"This dear little monthly visitant we believe to be by far the purest, safest, and most attractive magazine for the little one's at home, published in this country."

MR. JOHN B. GOUGH says of
"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"
"I can endorse it thoroughly. It is a most welcome visitor to the family of children at my own home."

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

BRITISH HONDURAS.

BELIZE, British Honduras,
February 6, 1868.

Mr. Editor: In your letter of the 24th ult., which I had the pleasure of receiving per last steamer, you ask me: "If you were all back in the United States, with the knowledge you now have of that country, would you think of emigrating to Honduras?" In reply, I beg leave to say, for the benefit of all who may feel concerned, that if I were there again, situated as the Southern people are, with my experience of about twelve months here, I would not know what course was best to pursue, because I don't know—can't know—what is in the future. I wish I did, that I might tell my friends; but I feel unable and unwilling to advise any one either to remain where he is or to seek refuge elsewhere. If I knew that the troubles in that country would soon culminate, and pass the crisis to a favorable termination, I would think the people had as well, perhaps better, remain at home to struggle through with their misfortunes, unless the ordeal is to be too severe. But if, on the contrary, I knew that the present evils were to grow worse, and continue long without amelioration, I should think the sooner the good people made their escape the better.

Here the government is settled and quiet, and the laws are wholesome and equitably administered; the climate is healthy and pleasant, and the soil is rich, and productive of valuable commodities; but the country is a wilderness, in a primitive state in most parts of it, and nobody ought to think of moving here unless they can first make up their minds and feel certain that they can depend upon the determination to endure the privations and hardships common to all new countries. Perhaps they will encounter fewer in this climate than in almost any other. I think less effort will be required to make simply a living here, and proper industry and economy ought to better their circumstances.—But immigrants will find some things objectionable here. In so new a country as this they must not expect to have the advantages and pleasures of such society as they have been accustomed to until they form it for themselves; and the sand flies and other gnats, called "bottle flies," are very annoying in some localities at times. The ants are also very troublesome in some places. But there are very few mosquittoes, house flies or fleas, no bed-bugs, no dangerous wild beasts, and but very few snakes or other objectionable things.

D. W. FOSTER.

[We understand by a private letter from Dr. Foster that he and the Rev. Mr. Avera intend returning to this country. Their destination will be East Texas.—EDITOR.]

CHINA MISSION.

THE DEATH OF KWAN.

Mr. Young J. Allen, the Southern Methodist missionary, in a recent letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate, notices the death of an old China Methodist brother:

Mr. Editor:—Early on Saturday morning, the 22d Sept., 1866, in company with my guide, I set out to visit the family of Kwan Ya-tsang, of whose death I had just the evening before heard. We had proceeded far into the city before we met Pau Yoong, the eldest son, coming for me. After greeting, he first told me, with Kwan Ya-tsang [illegible] "My venerable father, Kwan, has gone to heaven." The Chinese use a peculiar expression, Shi-kiu, when announcing the death of a person, which means respectively, "is not," "passed away," and "sleepeth;" terms strikingly equivalent, to our Old and New Testament expressions.

To my questions as to his father's recent illness, he replied that "he suffered much from the excessive heat of summer; was for a long while prostrated with chillbains, and finally, but a few weeks since, had a severe attack of cold, which greatly disordered his head, and ultimately settling on his bowels, terminated fatally on the 15th Sept. in his seventy-eight year." Anticipating such an event," he continued, "we wrote a letter for him and dispatched it to the church at Shanghai, that you might be apprised of his sickness and remember him in prayer." That letter had not reached Shanghai, however, when I left, so that I was unaware, until my arrival, of what a disappointment I was to meet, and the sad reflections I should encounter, where I had anticipated so much joy and Christian fellowship.

As to his Christian integrity and faithfulness, Pau Yoong bore testimony in the following words: "He was instant in prayer; assembling his family night and morning, he read to them from the Scriptures, which grew more and more precious to him as life was closing. He kept the Bible by him in bed and read, prayed, and praised throughout his sickness, and exhorted his family to live by the same rule and mind the same things which had regulated his life and made happy his last days. He was conscious to the last moment, and died exclaiming, Shih Kiai! Shih Kiai!".

On hearing those last words my heart melted within me, and I rejoiced in the dying Christian's triumph; but while they were still resounding in my ears I encountered a painful struggle, a doubt, which made me hesitate and ask Pau Yoong to repeat them again. He did so, and instead of "O! the Cross! the Cross!" I found that I had confounded kiai, which means "cross," with Kiai, which means "commandments," and that his last words were, "O! the Commandments! the Commandments!"

I looked for Calvary but beheld Sinai—for the cross but beheld the law! I was startled, bewildered by the sudden transition thus forced upon me, but the painful substitute had to be made.

I had long known and loved well the aged brother, and esteemed him as matured in Christian experience and faith as any I have seen in this field, and doubtless he was, but he is no more. Born in 1788, he was brought down to us from a period antedating Christian missions (Protestant) to China, and by his great age and long experience of the ways of his heathen countrymen, was calculated, if any are, to appreciate the gospel; but even he died, as we have seen, clinging to the law. In his life and prayers, however, I know him to have acknowledged and trusted in Jesus, and to have exemplified, as far as I have yet seen it in China, the life of a Christian.

He was a native of Nankin, the oldest surviving member of the Kwan family—was a hatter by trade, and had a shop; besides which, conjointly with other members of the same family, he possessed considerable real estate and other ancestral property, such as houses, in the city of Nankin. When the rebels came he fled with his family to Shanghai, in 1853, I believe, sacrificing, losing all that he had to save his life. In 1857 or '58 he came in contact with the gospel—believed and was baptized the 2d of January, 1859. His name is the eleventh on our church-book. Soon after he was made sexton of our city chapel, and though at first his mind rather revolted at the idea, he soon learned to esteem and appreciate the capacity of doorkeeper in the house of the Lord. He enjoyed daily opportunities of hearing the word preached, and soon gave evidence that they were not unimproved. His growth in grace was remarkable, and his faith extraordinary. A truly converted heathen never doubts, and God forbid that we should ever teach him how. He was a regular attendant on our Sabbath services; the Sabbath-school and class-meeting were precious to him, and never shall I forget the last Sabbath in April with us in Shanghai. As he was going away on Monday to return to his ancestral home in his native city, from which he had been exiled more than ten years, and as we doubtful whether we should ever [illegible] again in this capacity, I addressed [illegible] church the benefit of his Christian experience. He did so at length, and so full of pathos, rich unction, and deep heart-utterance were the words he spoke, that for once I beheld the phenomenon of a church, and many heathen, whose callous, passionless souls are so difficult to move to thought and feeling, overwhelmed and sobbing. The old man thanked God for the providence that had disinherited him on earth to make him an heir of heaven, and told us that was he going home to die, that his bones might not be lost among strangers, but rest with those of his fathers.

Having closed his remarks, he cast his eyes, suffused in tears, upon the weeping church, and exclaimed Tien ging tsai-hwi—"In heaven we (shall) meet again." Equivalent to "meet me in heaven" among Christians.

He returned to Nankin in the winter of 1863, soon after it was recaptured. In all the time which has intervened we had only occasional letters. Our financial embarrassments, and the consequent secular engagements by which we were bound, prevented the cultivation and extention of the rich and fertile influence of which he was capable. A rare opportunity for good has been lost to the mission, and the death of our aged brother, whom I hesitate not to place first in the ranks of our little church, is a loss to us irreparable.

SHANGHAI, China, Sept. 5, 1867.

We do not make so gloomy an inference from the dying confession of Kwan Ya-Tsang as Brother Allen. It does not follow he did not hold fast to the cross, because he was impressed with the purity and majesty of the law. He doubtless experienced the blessedness of those who "do his commandments." Such a dying scene would not discourage us. We wish our dear brethren in China had millions more of such converts.—EDITOR.

THE EPISCOPAL CONVENTION.

FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The twenty-seventh annual convention of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese in Louisiana commenced its session in Trinity Church. It having been generally understood that the services with which the convention would open were to be of unusual interest, a large congregation assembled to participate in them. Nor were they disappointed. The music was superb. "Jerusalem the Golden" was sung in a manner worthy of the grand old hymn, and that is the highest praise we can render. After the service the Rev. Mr. Dalzell preached an eloquent and impressive sermon on the mutual responsibilities of pastors and their flocks. The holy communion was then administered by the bishop, assisted by the various clergymen of the diocese; after which the bishop called the convention to order.

The roll of the clergy entitled to seats in the convention was called, and the following gentlemen answered to their names:

Rev. W. F. Adams, A. G. Bakewell, J. W. Beckwith, D. D., R. F. Clute, W. T. D. Dalzell, D. D., C. Dowe, E. Fontaine, J. F. Girault, G. S. Hedges, D. D., C. W. Hilton, L. Y. Jessup, T. B. Lawson, W. T. Leacock, D. D., D. S. Lewis, D. D., James Philson, G. W. Stickney, T. R. B. Trader.

Rev. Mr. Adams and Rev. Mr. Clute were appointed by the bishop a committee to examine credentials of lay delegates. It being discovered from their report that several parties had failed to send delegates, it was, on motion, resolved that those parishes which had neglected to elect delegates might be represented in the convention by such gentlemen as would volunteer for that purpose, and as should be accepted by the convention.

The report of the treasurer of the convention, T. L. Dix, Esq., was presented and received. Rev. J. F. Girault was unanimously elected secretary of the convention.

A resolution was then passed inviting the clergy of the diocese not entitled to seats, the clergy from other dioceses, and candidates for orders, to seats in the convention.

Rev. A. G. Bakewell was unanimously elected assistant secretary, and Thos. L. Dix, Esq., unanimously re-elected treasurer of the convention. A motion to adjourn till 9 A. M. to-day was then carried.

The principal business to be transacted to-day is the reading of the bishop's annual report, a document which will prove of great interest to members of the church and all others concerned in religious matters. We advise all who can [illegible] present.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The St. Charles Theater was crowded last night with an enthusiastic multitude of citizens, in response to the invitation of the Democratic State Central Committee. Rarely, perhaps never before, has New Orleans witnessed so intelligent and so numerous a political assemblage; and this fact is auspicious of a revival of hope in the promises of the future, and of an awakening from the gloom and despondency in which this population have been plunged for the last two years. It is not that they recieve any immediate exit from the labyrinth of difficulties by which they are surrounded; but they do foresee the approaching overthrow of the party of despotism and of barbarism, and the proximate triumph of the party of constitutional liberty. The peculiar significance of the meeting is the resuscitation, among only people of an interest in general politics, and the manifestation of a profound desire to aid the great Democratic party of the country in the impending struggle with radicalism. It is very suggestive that every reference to that party, and to the successes which it has recently achieved, called forth unanimous applause; whilst the names of Andrew Johnson, General Hancock and General Steedman were greeted with prolonged and enthusiastic cheers. There was nothing of a sectional character in the meeting. There was nothing said that could indicate the existence of a sectional feeling; on the contrary, the intensest yearnings of the popular heart seemed to be directed toward the Democracy of the country, and especially of the North.—N. O. Times, Feb. 16.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Secretary Seward responds to the Governor of Ohio's request for the return of the papers ratifying the constitutional amendment that there is no law permitting the withdrawal of any document from the department at the request of an individual or State. Therefore the order ratifying the amendment and the one rescinding it will both remain on file.

It has transpired that Burlingame's mission to Europe is to secure assistance against the Chinese rebels, who are pushing the Imperialists. Certain commercial privileges are to be tendered as compensation for material and political aid.

An ineffectual attempt has been made at army headquarters to obtain the Grant and Hancock correspondence.

The case of John Young Brown was resumed. Brown plead his own case. He was rejected—108 yeas to 43 nays.

A bill declaring bridges on the New Orleans and Chattanooga Railroad a postroad, passed.

In the reconstruction committee to-day Stevens presented resolutions impeaching the President for high crimes and misdemeanors. It was tabled by the following vote:

Yeas—Bingham, Paine, Beaman and Hurlburd, Republicans, and Brooks and Beck, Democrats.

Nays—Stevens, Boutwell and Farnsworth. This is considered the finality of the impeachment question.

Tennessee are hopeless of relieving their roads from the operation of the legislation proposed by the Southern railroad committee.

The following was received to-day:

"MONTGOMERY, ALA., Feb. 13.

"Hon. D. T. Patterson:

"Ratification defeated by over fifteen thousand majority. What is the prospect of Sherman's bill respecting Alabama?

"Signed: "D. E. DALTON,
"Governor's Secretary."

Discontinuance of the Freedmen's Bureau in Tennessee, Kentucky and Maryland occurs on Saturday. Countermanding of the order improbable.

Meade telegraphs that he is not sure whether Alabama has accepted or rejected the constitution. He is investigating whether polls were not opened in certain counties. If not he will order special elections.

A change of venue for Surratt is probable.

The annual deficiency bill became a law by the lapse of ten days.

The President nominated for distinguished courage, skill and ability displayed during the war of the rebellion, Major Gen. Wm. T. Sherman to be general of the armies of the United States by brevet.

A reliable letter from Beirut, Syria, reports Gen. Breckinridge there, January 1, contemplating a journey through Syria. Being asked about returning to America, Gen. Breckinridge said he had no wish to become a martyr, and should not return until he could do so with safety, but that my [illegible] country actively.

Stevens was authorized [illegible] bill dividing Texas into four or more States.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The Senate Military Committee passed a resolution respectfully returning Sheridan's brevet nomination, with disapproval of the proposed grade.

Arkansas will vote five days upon the adoption or rejection of the new constitution, commencing March 15th.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The indications are that the meeting of the Democratic National Executive Committee, in this city, on the 22d, will be largely attended by influential Democrats who seek to have the meeting of the Democratic Convention in places of their choice. A large number arrived to-night from the West and the North.

At the session of the Reconstruction Committee, to-day, Democrats and extreme Radicals voted together against the Bingham and Sherman bills to admit Alabama. The Democrats opposed it in toto and upon principle; Stevens et al. oppose it because they will not agree to make a sprinkling of Alabama, but contend that all Southern States should be governed by the same law. The Alabama project was therefore defeated.—N. O. Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The events of the last few days have left the President completely master of the situation. The correspondence which was called for in such hot haste to get off the "last word" from the President, which, it was hoped, would place Mr. Johnson in the position of a vanquished opponent, has had the effect of causing the more honorable of Grant's adherents and supporters to hang their heads with shame. The more reckless of them, however, among whom must be included the party leaders, exhibit the indecorous anger and resentment of the foiled criminal—a condition of mind which was intensified by the last published letters which were exchanged between the President and the General of the Army.

The movers in the matter of impeachment have also received a checkmate—sensational telegrams to the contrary notwithstanding. In the face of Thad. Stevens' scathing rebuke in committee, a clear majority refused to indorse his resolutions of impeachment. To do them justice, it may be said that this refusal was not based upon an antipathy to impeachment, per se, but arose from a reluctance to encounter the popular indignation which would overwhelm the party who would countenance a malignant prosecution of the chief magistrate. The leading spirits in the conspiracy have also been dashed by the boldness of the President's recent moves, and fear his strength with the people, of the magnitude of which they are ignorant, and would rather not be informed through any blunder of their own making.

From all parts of the North comes the gratifying intelligence of the great changes in public sentiment in favor of the President's policy—changes wrought by the eminent self-possession, tact and ability with which he has conducted his controversy with the madmen in Congress.—Picayune.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—The President's reply to the Baltimore municipal committee is conservative, but determined. It develops nothing new, but concludes: "I repeat that the encouragement given me on this occasion is very acceptable. The stoutest heart, when surrounded by doubts and menaced with perils, needs countenance and support. The kind expressions of approval of the City Council of Baltimore, sincerely appreciated, will be remembered with gratitude as long as life shall last."

Hancock's recent removals is still under consideration at Grant's headquarters.

Stevens opposes special legislation regarding Alabama's admission. If anything is necessary it might as well be wholesale, letting all in at once.

Morton, Congressman elect, and the Chairman of the Alabama Republican Convention, were on the floor of the House to-day, urging her admission.

Gen. O. L. Sheppard, Colonel of the 15th Infantry, has been ordered to take command of the Sub-District of Alabama.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—The Radical councils regarding Alabama are sadly divided. Gen. Howard has telegraphed to the Freedmen officers to do the best they can for discharged voters.

The Republican Congressional Executive Committee admits the [illegible] of the constitution of Arkansas [illegible]

"THE EVEN BRINGS A' HAME."

Upon the hills the wind is sharp and cold,
The sweet young grasses wither on the wold,
And we, O Lord! have wandered from the fold:
But evening brings us home.

Among the mists we stumbled, and the rocks,
Where the brown lichen whitens, and the fox
Watches the straggler from the scattered flocks;
But evening brings us home.

The sharp thorns prick us, And our tender feet
Are cut and bleeding, and the lambs repeat
Their pitiful complaints—oh, rest is sweet
When evening brings us home.

We have been wounded by the hunter's darts:
Our eyes are very heavy, and our hearts
Sore, for thy coming—when the light departs—
As evening brings us home.

The darkness gathers. Through the gloom no star
Bids to guide us. We have wandered far—
Without thy lamp we know not where we are:
But evening brings us home.

The wolds are round us, and the snow drifts thicken:
O thou, dear Shepherd! leave us not to sicken
In the waste night—our tardy footsteps quicken
As evening brings us home.

Popery is a Cunning Compound of Superficial Truth and Solid Error.

UNKNOWN TONGUE.

I. It will readily appear that the papal use of the Latin language—an unintelligible medium—is in direct opposition to reason, to the Bible, the conduct of the writers of the New Testament, and to that of the pristine Christian church.

What good grounds are found in reason for conducting the worship of God in an unknown tongue—a tongue that is to the mass of the people "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal?" None at all. Only think of American Protestants conducting their religious service in Chinese! How can one content the soul by a word without an idea, by a language that stops in the ear, entering not the mind? If man were a material machine he might be addressed in any manner—in Patagonian or Hottentotonian, by the barking of a hound or the braying of a donkey. Man, however, having a soul, demands to have his reason employed.

Not only reason, but the Bible, also, repudiates the papal use of the unknown tongue. The Scripture passages, proving that the Bible ought to be read, do at the same time prove that it ought to be read in the known or vulgar language. Was not this clearly indicated by the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, when each of the apostles' hearers was addressed in his own vernacular? Rome! read Acts 2. Read and blush! Moreover, a passage in the Old Testament upsets this injurious practice of popery: "They read in the book of the law distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading." (Nehemiah 8: 8.)

Again: The writers of the New Testament employed the Greek tongue, then more known than any other in the civilized world. Now is not the adoption of this language, by the inspired penmen—the language then most widely spread—a strong argument in opposition to the papal plan of shutting up the Bible and prayers in an unknown tongue?

And does not also the early Christian church rise up to condemn this unbiblical practice? It does. Ancient Rome, soon after the Christian era, adopted the Latin translation of the Bible, and employed that language in their religious exercises, because it was then the language of the Italians—the language most generally known. Modern Rome, however, prefers a tongue unknown to a tongue known—preferring Latin, a dead language now, to Italian in Italy, French in France, German in Germany, and the like.

II. We will find it worth while to inquire into the corrupt motive the papal church has for being in love with the absurd custom of using a dead language—a custom at war with common sense and good feeling. Without attempting to give all the motives we will mention several: It is to keep the people ignorant, and therefore dependent on the priesthood. Ignorance is the mother of popery, aye, and the daughter too—ignorance being both mother and daughter—cause and effect—of popery. Again: It is to maintain a bond of union between the many priests, binding all the members of the priesthood in one huge confederation, in one body wieldy and governable—a body separate from the people, alien to the laity in language, and hostile to popular right and the dominion of liberty. Finally, it is to bind the different sees to the see of Rome. Latin being the ancient language of Rome, the adoption of Latin as the official language marks every church with an implicit subjection to the church of Rome.

III. If religious improvement, instead of casualty and special interest, were the grand object of the papal court, it would adopt the Greek for its official language in preference to the Latin. To render this preference apparent we will give six reasons:

1. Greek is the original language of the New Testament, the more important of the two grand divisions of the Bible. Therefore making Greek the general language of the church would tend directly to the diffusion and well-being of Christianity. Pure Christianity, however, was not the great end that the papal church had in view.

2. Greek gives access to a very good ancient version of the Old Testament, the Septuagint. This is the leading antique version of the Old Testament, both in time and truth.

3. Greek literature is decidedly superior to the Latin, the intellectual treasure of Greece preponderating that of Rome. Both in philosophy and poetry Greece excels her rival, Rome.

4. Greek has never failed to be a living language. It was the language of the lower Eastern Constantinopolitan empire. So, also, has it always been the language of Greece proper. That the modern Greek differs somewhat from the ancient we know; but it is nevertheless fundamentally and essentially the same language.

5. Greek is a better language than Latin. Though not claiming the pomp and majesty of the Latin, the Greek is superior in several points of moment. It is more musical, more copious, more flexible, and also more precise. We affirm what is generally known: it clearly outdoes the Latin in many respects.

6. Greek is more original than Latin. Latin borrows largely from Greek: hence Greek, being earlier, goes further back into antiquity, lying nearer the original or radical language of all—the language of Adam and Eve. Unless reasons equally strong can be found on the side of Latin, we shall think the Greek deserved to be chosen as the lingual organ of the republic of letters. Why, then, was Latin preferred by Rome?

PREACHER-LIFE.

MY FIRST CONFERENCE.

The call to preach having been decided, license and recommendation to the annual Conference were immediately obtained, and I went, "bound in the spirit," to W——, "not knowing the things that would befall me there."

Arriving late one cold evening, I applied, together with quite a number of preachers, for a home during the session. Being a recruit, my name, of course, was not down, and being unacquainted with the preacher in charge, I was sent, with quite a number of the unprovided, to the hotel. The landlord—none of the best caterers, I should judge, even under ordinary circumstances—was completely over-filled by the unexpected number sent him. Some half dozen or more of us were put to sleep on the floor, with only one covering above, and not much more underneath. I felt that my reception had not, certainly, been a warm one. A friend, however, on the next day interested himself in my behalf, and procured for me very comfortable quarters with a pleasant family. The only drawback was a preacher room-mate, who had been disappointed in not having a brother-in-law to occupy the place assigned to me. His undisguised feeling that I was not welcome pained me, and his numerous descantings upon the hardships of the itinerancy, and especially upon the objectionable features of a circuit to which he thought I would be sent, cost me many a pang of misgiving during the entire session. Preachers are but men at last, and it is a blessing that all are not like that brother.

Despite the unpleasant introduction, the appearance of the Conference room awed me. The venerable bishop made an impression on me as truly a man of God, that has only been strengthened by succeeding intercourse. The staid, earnest appearance of the preachers, and the strict scrutiny into character, impressed me more than ever with the solemn, the awful state I was about to take. Especially was my attention riveted and my heart made to beat faster when the applicants for admission on trial had, one by one, their claims discussed. Would they find as many things to say against me? would they probably reject me too? were questions very naturally suggested by the manner of dealing with other applicants. However, on the latter question I felt independent, as, if the Conference rejected me, my conscience would thus be acquitted, and I would gladly return to my farm.

What an impression the preaching made on me, and the singing! I remember most of the texts, and even the hymns, used on that occasion. The services at 11 A. M., on the Sabbath, were a great blessing to me. The solemn reading, by the bishop, of the hymn—

"Let Zion's watchmen all awake,
And take the alarm they give;
Now let them from the mouth of God
Their awful charge receive," and his practical exposition of the text: "Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not," melted me down, and I could have shouted aloud praises to my God "for that He counted me faithful, putting me in the ministry."

The last evening of the session approached, and I was still as ignorant of my destination as ever an "uninitiated" was. All the citizens had learned that the appointments were to be read out, and the church was literally packed—aisles, gallery, and all. As the time drew nearer the interest deepened, and when the bishop arose to prepare for announcing the appointments it seemed that a pin could almost have been heard if it had fallen on the floor. His solemn, motherly charge, and the hearty voices of the preachers singing—

"And be our full assurance,
To different manner ready,"

were too much for me. My heart was full, and, hiding my face behind the pulpit, I wept and sobbed like a child.

As the appointments were read out, I watched the effect upon the preachers. The expression upon one venerable brother's face reminded me of a reply of one of Napoleon's soldiers when ordered to charge a battery, where death was almost inevitable. At first he refused, but summoning all his determination, he replied: "It behooves us to go and die for the Emperor." Other faces I could see fall, and a shade of disappointment pass quickly over them.—When my name and appointment were read out, involuntarily I repeated the name of the appointment, adding: "Why, where is that?" "Never mind," whispered a sympathizing brother: "I know that circuit. They are good people up there."

How desolate was my heart, how almost crushing the thought of suddenly leaving all former habits and associations, and going out among entire strangers to preach! I presume no one can ever know except a preacher, who, like me, was keenly alive to the alarming responsibilities of the position, and who had as yet experienced none of its sacred delights.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 17, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: You will oblige me by giving a place, in the columns of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, to the following correspondence between Mr. Jas. M. Putnam and Dr. F. G. Pugh, late of Ashley county, Arkansas. Its object is to correct false reports to which currency is given in respect to the quality of the lands in British Honduras.

In this connection I desire to say, for the information of those of our citizens who are preparing to move to that province, that, in recent letters received from Mr. Putnam and from Messrs. Young, Toledo & Co., they inform me that immigrants are arriving faster than they can well be accommodated, and recommend that ladies and children would remain here until their male relations have time to construct their houses for their reception, and to open a few acres of land for culture.

If this advice is followed the young and helpless will be saved from much exposure and suffering, which they must otherwise encounter. To meet this emergency Messrs. Young, Toledo & Co. have purchased a cargo of lumber, and are proceeding to construct native houses, with plank floors, on portions of their lands between the rivers Molio and Rio Grande, and at the head of low water navigation on the Moho to lay off a town and erect native houses, as well for the accommodation of settlers as for headquarters and church and school facilities for the neighborhood. This is represented as a district of excellent lands, bordering on two navigable rivers, between which they will open a road, as well as one to the sea coast.

I lament to say that on the arrival of what is known as the Hatch colony, of thirty-five persons, at the mouth of the Moho, the cholera was prevailing at a Carib village amongst the natives. This colony, touched at the distress of the natives, supplied them with medicines, and when they were attacked themselves by this disease their small stock of medicines was exhausted, and six of their number died before other remedies could be supplied. This so discouraged the ladies of the party that they determined to return to the States, notwithstanding the gentlemen, as I am informed, wished to remain. At this juncture Messrs. Young, Toledo & Co., much to their credit and honor, in consideration of their great afflictions and pecuniary loss, went to their relief and offered, if they would remain in the country, to provide them with a comfortable residence and servant in Belize until they could erect quarters for them on their land; to donate to each of the married men of that family 640 acres, and 320 to the unmarried young men and women; to clear up ten acres for each married man, put them up a house, and advance the means to buy seed for cropping, etc. This noble act of generosity, I learn, was accepted, and they remain. The cholera had nearly disappeared from Belize at the latest dates.

My object is to supply information to such as think of moving to that fine province, and to dissuade all from taking their families until they have made some necessary preparations to receive them.

Very respectfully,

J. P. HARRISON,
Agent for Young, Toledo & Co.

JANUARY 21, 1868.

To the Editor of the Honduras Colonist—SIR: Herewith I hand you a copy of a letter that I have recently received, which, as it bears upon matters of public interest at this moment, you are at liberty to publish if you see proper.

It will refute some of the reports set afloat and circulated freely, that there are no lands in the colony of any value.

The family of Mr. C. S. Hatch, who died on the steamer Trade Wind in this harbor, in October or November last, have come out, and give earnest of his and their faith by bringing all of their household and worldly goods and effects, and going to the locality chosen by their deceased father, between the rivers Rio Grande and Moho. They and their friends, numbering in all about thirty five souls, went on board the schooner Raglan to the village of Punta Gorda, where they will remain until they shall have built houses on the land which they will select. They were pleased with their trip down and the village, as the captain informs me. Accompanying also please find the circular to which Dr. Pugh alludes.

I am, very respectfully yours,

JAS. M. PUTNAM.

SEVEN HILLS, Jan. 12, 1868.

MR. J. M. PUTNAM—My Dear Sir: Some time back I wrote to you a short note, stating to you that I had an idea of locating myself on the Moho river. Since that time I have seen more of the country and have changed my notion to Middle river, owing to its being a more convenient part of the country to get to, and I think the land is equally as good. I will take a section of land now, and will make the first payment soon. I will probably take two thousand acres more.

I will let you know as soon as I hear from Arkansas, which will be in February or March.

I am planting a little and building. Mr. Putnam, from what I have seen of the country I am perfectly satisfied that it is everything that you represent in your circular, which I read at the office of J. P. Harrison & Co., at New Orleans. I send you two letters, which you will oblige me very much if you will send to New Orleans, care of Gilmore & Hopkins. If I have anything come to your care please send it to Seven Hills, care of Mr. Bennett. I remain sincerely yours,

F. G. PUGH.

SIX HUNDRED PEOPLE SLEEPING IN CHURCH.—Rev. Dr. Guthrie, in a recent address, speaks as follows of the effects of improper ventilation in churches:

One reason why you see so many going to sleep in churches is not because they have a bad preacher or a bad sermon, but because they have bad air. I remember I was once present in a congregation in the town of Thurso, which contained as many as 1,200 people, and, perhaps, you will hardly believe me when I tell you that on that occasion I saw what I never saw before, and what I am sure you never saw, and what I hope I shall never see again—I saw 600 people asleep! I happened at the time to be living with Sir George Sinclair, a very excellent gentleman, who resides in the immediate neighborhood of that town. I told him what I had seen in the church. "Oh," said he, "that is nothing to what I have seen myself; I have seen in almost every pew the whole people asleep, with only here and there an exception." Now, what was the cause of that? It was no fault on the part of the preacher; for the minister is an excellent preacher, and excellent people the congregation generally are; but I told them, in addressing a meeting some days after, every man might as well have gone into an apothecary's shop before he went to church and taken a dose of laudanum to set him to sleep. I say they might as well have done that as to breathe the kind of air with which the church was filled.

On Sunday last, says the London Watchman of Jan. 8, a grand ceremony for the distribution of prizes in the Agricultural Department of the Paris Universal Exhibition took place at the Tuileries. Messrs. Howard, the celebrated agricultural engineers of Bedford, having gained the highest distinction—a grand prize—were summoned by telegraph on Saturday to be present the following day—Sunday—at two o'clock, to receive their prize at the hands of the Emperor. They replied by telegram that they declined to attend, and gave as their reason that to invite Englishmen to be present at such a ceremony on a Sunday was not paying proper respect to the British national feeling on an important religious question.

At the government Experimental Farm at Washington, 576 varieties of cereals and garden vegetables were tested this year. Among these were 109 varieties of wheat, 20 of oats, 10 of corn, 29 of grass seeds, and 36 of potatoes.

NOTES FROM TEXAS.

Bishop McTyeire is writing a series of highly interesting articles in the Nashville Advocate, giving an account of his recent episcopal tour. We have given his "No. 1." The following paragraphs are from "No. 2:"

"Sulphur," as the wagoners call it, is a pleasant and enterprising village, and will, doubtless, soon absorb Tarrant—the county seat, four miles distant. Its merchants were, before the revolution in their fortunes, richer men, used to large plans and ideas; and thus development is guaranteed. The best building is the academy, under the superintendence of Brother Clark, a local preacher. Ours is the only meeting-house. The Presbyterian brethren have a monthly appointment in it. If, as they promised me, our people will build a parsonage this year, Sulphur Springs will be a comfortable and self-supporting station.

The Conference had organized when I arrived on Wednesday; lay Delegates had been recognized, and all was in working order. The doings of the Conference, the statistics and appointments, in this case, as in the others, were forwarded, and have been published in your columns. This was the first session of the Trinity Conference. The General Conference made a contingent order for the division of the old East Texas, which ran from the Indian Territory to the Gulf, between the Trinity River and its headwaters on the west, and the State-line on the east. The tier of counties lying along Red River, which laves its northern line, are very fertile and healthy—Lamar, Fannin, Grayson, Cooke; and lower down—Denton, Collin, Dallas, and Hunt. They grow wheat finely in those black prairies, and raise stock. There is a tide of valuable immigration in that direction from Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, and the Carolinas. It is a white man's country—few negroes are there, as the late registration shows. The great Southern Pacific Railroad must by-and-by pass that way; and there are prospects, sooner to be realized, of roads pushing up from their own coast and tapping that region of North Texas.

Our church is receiving valuable accessions in this way. A fine class of people are now on the move. In the Conference-room we had several earnest "conversations" on the subject of pastoral visiting. It is greatly demanded of the itinerants in this and other Conferences of Texas. Of course they will not rely upon such means only; but should they do no more than look after those sheep and gather them into the fold, as they come, they will have a large increase of membership. And here let me say to those in the "old States," whose friends and relatives have gone out, and to the pastors who have given them certificates for a local transfer of their membership, they would do a service, in correspondence, to stir up their minds by way of remembrance. Not a few church-letters have gone out of date. The love of many has waxed cold under adventure and the loss of well established personal and Christian sympathies. A word in season—how good is it? The church is there to receive them. We gratefully record, what is only another proof of the adaptedness of our itinerant system and ecclesiastical economy to the world's salvation, that the net-work of districts, circuits, and stations covers this land. Methodist preachers, abundant in labors, and proving their high commission, are there seeking the wandering souls of men.

McKenzie College, near Clarksville, in Red River county, affords to this Conference, as to the East Texas, joint proprietors, excellent educational facilities for their young men. Dr. McKenzie, the president, is doing a good work for Texas, and for Methodism, in his twenty years' leading. A few young men, trained by him, are in the Conferences, and would that we had scores of them. I trust the two Conferences will take measures whereby a number of rising men, called of God and approved by the church, may be passed forward from their college into the itinerant ranks. The fathers before them ought to indicate their policy. They must not be looking to the old States and Conferences to furnish them preachers. They have the material at home, and the opportunity for self-reliance, under the Divine blessing; and could and should train up a ministry of the highest efficiency within their own bounds.

Egypt has nothing equal to the wretchedness of her whom the Scripture terms the "strange," the "evil woman." The loss of youthful innocence, the wreck of early hope, the abandonment of holy principles; the words and thoughts and deeds of shame, inward remorse racking the heart, and outward disease undermining the frame, these are the beginnings of sorrow; but the end is not yet.

OUR WEALTH HOW WE USE IT.

BY BISHOP A. O. ANDREW.

SUNDAY MORNING, Feb. 6, 1868.

In the days of our prosperity we gave to God and his cause only a no darger that his children or the small portion of our means; scarce-heirs may prevent, by a course of ly did we give more than our sure law, the faithful carrying into ef-plus. We always kept in view the fect of the provisions of the testa-attainment of certain worldly ob-ment? Have we not known many jects, and if, after these objects such instances in the course of one were gained, there was any surplus, life? If we often has it been remaining, we gave that to God; the case that, for the advancement if, after we had purchased the cot- of some college or other object, ted lands of the negroes there have never been paid. The children sary to cultivate those elevated, to whom the property would belong acres; if, after we had established the will were exhausted, and we our children on good farms and have ever been taught to regard placed them in the front rank among us very sacred the claims of God their fellow-citizens, if, after we upon the wealth which he saw had given our daughters a fashion-fit to entrust to our parents' keep able education and supplied them ing, that they themselves might with a liberal allowance of pin-be enabled to discharge the duties money; if, after all these things are met, there is anything left, why then we shall not miss it, and we will liberally contribute for the support of God's cause. Is this the cause of the failure or the languishing condition of almost every charitable interest among us? We have catered to self first, and the claims of God and charity are heeded only after all other demands are attended to. But let us not mistake. God requires sacrifice and the men or women who are not willing to make large sacrifices cannot claim to be God's children. We fear that this thing of holding on for our own use, to all except a very small amount for God, is the plague-spot in the Church. We encourage in our children at a very early age fondness for show, and pleasure, and they grow up in the belief that these are to be the paramount consideration of their young lives. Is it any wonder that, trained thus, they should make pleasure the deity of their adoration. Hence they are found among those who bow at the shrine of fashion; they imbibe from maternal lips principles of extravagance and selfishness; they are slow to any good work; they hold on to the church by a very slender thread, which is easily broken by any demand which threatens to rob them of their cherished gratifications. And this too, it may be, is the reason why so many of our children go off into other churches. They desert the folds where they were reared because they think the tax upon their pleasures will not be so burdensome in some other fold, and the result is generally a want of respect and reverence for their parents. They may perhaps speak of them kindly and in tones of pity, as being behind the times in their religious opinions and practices; but they are hardly allowed to be enlightened Christians, because they have not walked by the flickering light held up by their wiser children. Now let us look back to the time when we were prosperous in this land. Our barns and gin-houses were full to repletion. What did we do with it? What a small tithe went into the treasury of God or charity! We continued to add to our acres and our slaves, whilst our colleges were at half endowed, and our foreign mission—the only one we had established—scarcely able to give to the devoted men whom we had sent there to preach Jesus and the resurrection a very meagre support, because the church at home, after it had bought all the lands and negroes deemed desirable, had scarcely any surplus left to divide between the different claimants sent by God to demand from these, his debtors, what was due to him.

But let us look a little more seriously into this matter. Such was our course when we were at the flood-tide of fortune. Besides being industrious in laying up for our children worldly goods enough to ruin them, or render it at least very doubtful about their salvation, some parents, who felt a little conscientious about the appropriation of their Lord's money, excused themselves by vowing mentally that when they came to die they would make all straight by liberal bequests to the various departments of God's cause. But, then, if they should not experience a change of purpose, because of a change of fortune, there are a thousand contingencies which may prevent the carrying out of this purpose. But allowing that the will made an infidel, a Christ gave to God only a no darger that his children or the small portion of our means; scarce-heirs may prevent, by a course of ly did we give more than our sure law, the faithful carrying into ef-plus. We always kept in view the fect of the provisions of the testa-attainment of certain worldly ob-ment? From Good Words.

"ECCE HOMO."

PART I.—NO. III.

BY THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.

Thus, then, the period of our Lord's coming, though it was in many points a period of advanced civilization, was one at which the world's dark, very dark, as regard to what constitutes either the abstract truth or the practical form of a religion. The spirit of the general society was corrupt, and it had to be treated by forbearance to admit the light; most of all, it is natural so to admit it that the light, after having entered, should not become darkness, for "great would have been that darkness."

Thus it is, however, as I have stated them, my anticipations only or showings both of what—with a view to the utmost purity and durability—Christianity bestowed on the world. Such anticipations are of little moment in comparison with the facts, or unless supported by them. In speaking of the facts, I mean simply the facts as represented in the gospels. Possibly the language used by the author of "Ecce Homo," in his preface, may have created, and also may even have warranted, an expectation that he was about to undertake an examination of the external evidence generally, for their authenticity and genuineness. It implies no disparagement of that sphere of labor, or of those who have worked, or who work in it, to assert that there is another sphere or office quite distinct from it, and perfectly legitimate. It is to weigh, not the credentials of the messenger, but the nature of the message; to leave for a moment to others the seal and superscription, and to take a glance at the contents; to inquire what may be the moral and practical evidences of truth which they bear upon their front. And I cannot but presume to think that this is a business exceedingly important even in its critical aspect, for the intrinsic nature of the documents, and of the lessons to be derived from them, may in itself supply the most powerful testimony with regard to their authorship and authority, or may, on the other hand, leave room for so a gap in the history that it will be impossible to be filled.

It is well, however, to remove out of the way at preliminary stage a way of a right approach to the question how the greatest Lord Saviour is exhibited to us in the gospels. In this country, and in all the United Kingdoms and all its dependencies, we are also a Christian country, perhaps rather in name than in fact, but yet a country of palpable contrast, and of assumptions that will not bear the application of a moment's thought. For example, looking through the eye of Revelation, we have a perfectly free access to the Holy Scriptures, we enjoy the same privileges, we profess the same faith, we have the same sanctions, we look for the same hopes, we are subject to the same judgments, we have the same duties, we are heirs of the same promises, we are bound by the same obligations, we are partakers of the same sacraments, we have the same means of grace, we are members of the same body, we have the same Head, we are children of the same Father, we are destined to the same inheritance, we are to be partakers of the same glory, we are to be judged by the same Judge, we are to be rewarded with the same reward, we are to be punished with the same punishment, we are to be cast into the same hell, we are to be received into the same heaven, we are to be made like unto the same Jesus Christ, we are to be conformed to the same image, we are to be glorified with the same glory, we are to be crowned with the same crown, we are to be clothed with the same robe, we are to be fed with the same food, we are to be refreshed with the same drink, we are to be healed with the same balm, we are to be comforted with the same comfort, we are to be delivered with the same deliverance, we are to be saved with the same salvation, we are to be redeemed with the same redemption, we are to be sanctified with the same sanctification, we are to be purified with the same purification, we are to be cleansed with the same cleansing, we are to be washed with the same washing, we are to be baptized with the same baptism, we are to be anointed with the same anointing, we are to be sealed with the same seal, we are to be marked with the same mark, we are to be numbered with the same number, we are to be counted with the New Orleans:

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1868.

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post-office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

Notice to Subscribers.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

BISHOP ANDREW.

Our readers will find a communication from the venerable senior Bishop of our church on the third page of this number of the Christian Advocate, upon the sin and folly of giving to the Lord only the last sheaf. We will publish another communication from the Bishop next week.

ORANGES.

We are much indebted to Mrs. Dr. Danks, of Terrebonne, for a barrel of large golden oranges. No finer ones grow in Havana. This fruit should yield the South more wealth than the North derives from its apple orchards. Plant orange groves, and let them be growing night and day, while the country is being reconstructed.

OPELOUSAS FEMALE SCHOOL.

We have received a circular from the Rev. B. F. White, superintendent of this well known institution. He and his accomplished lady have just returned from Europe, where they have had the opportunity of studying during the past eighteen months. They are prepared to receive forty boarders and accommodate one hundred pupils. Instruction will be given in English, French, and German; also in vocal and instrumental music, Latin and mathematics. Price for board, $15 per month; 75 cents a dozen for washing. Pupils are to furnish their own bedding, napkins, bowl and pitcher. $4 a month for English branches, $1 50 each for French and German, $5 for instrumental music. No charge for vocal music. All kinds of country produce received in payment—invariably in advance. Address Mrs. S. M. White or Rev. B. F. White, Opelousas, La. We hope that our friends will stand squarely up to their own schools. Catholics who send to a Protestant school cannot get absolution.

The Protestant Episcopal Diocesan convention met at Trinity Church, Jackson street, Fourth District, there being a numerous attendance of the clergy in the chancel, and the church proper being crowded with spectators. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Dalzell, and the choral services were beautifully chanted by a choir of nearly one hundred performers, collected from various Episcopal churches of this city.

HIGH-CHURCH PRETENSIONS.

The Catholics offer a considerable premium for proselyting, ten or twelve converts from the Protestant faith being considered quite enough to insure one's salvation. A defensive policy quite as masked is to deny absolution to all who send their children to Protestant schools. This has been publicly announced, and children are moreover distinctly informed that to attend the public schools is to be on the highway to hell. This intolerance is not confined to Rome. It enters into the creeds of a good many bodies of men who have a form of godliness. To consign to "uncovenanted mercy" all who are outside parties is the doctrine equally of Catholics, Mormons, Shakers, primitive Baptists, Campbellites, "old land-mark" Baptists, and Ritualistic Episcopalians. We are surprised that these ecclesiastical Ishmaelites are not afraid of each other. They certainly cannot all occupy the same space at the same time; and their mutual anathemas should bring at least a measure of relief to the minds of all who are so unfortunate as not to belong to either of them. Like the Scribes and Pharisees of old, these modern exclusives "shut up the kingdom of heaven against men." In the natural bigotry of the disciple who forbade one whom he saw casting out devils, simply "because he followeth not us," these self-pronounced church-men denounce all men who do not conform to their own order, no matter how godly may be their lives, nor how strong the evidences of their faith.

In the opening sermon of the Episcopal convention, just held in this city, the preacher stated that the Protestant Episcopal Church had powerful foes to meet—on the one side the Roman Catholics, and on the other the different sectaries; but her security rested in the promise that the "gates of hell should not prevail against her." This is the natural frame of the mind of every man who, without possessing the spirit of Christ, is found standing in holy places. The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, all told, amounts to 178,102 members, with an increase of 10,244 for the year; which, compared with the whole population of the United States of 31,429,891, is certainly a very small showing, especially when one looks at it in the light of its being the "only church," the entire church against which the "gates of hell" are arrayed, and remembers that it has had the only "divinely authorized," properly authenticated, regularly ordained ministry, and that it has been here on the spot in advance of Methodists, and as far back as the earliest settlement of Virginia, began its mighty agency of spreading holiness throughout these States and Territories. When we compare it with other forms of Protestant Christianity we find that it maintains one genuine characteristic of the true church: "it is the least of all seeds." And it is likely to retain this mark, for the Methodist Church now receives on probation annually more persons than the entire sum of Episcopalians in the United States.

The modest assumption of this "little flock" can be set forth by a few figures, indicating the strength of these "sects" which it so benignly patronizes.

The Methodists in the country, of all kinds, North and South, number 1,744,457 whites; the Baptists 1,094,806; the Congregationalists, 272,975; Presbyterians 472,377; and the Lutherans 332,155. This glorious company of godly people—Protestants—are diffusing everywhere the Holy Scriptures and holding forth the cross of the Saviour, from the Northern lakes to the Rio Grande. Twenty-six thousand six hundred and eighty ministers of the gospel, exclusive of lay preachers, are employed by these churches in this holy vocation. They are found in all the great thoroughfares, as well as in the sparsely settled regions of the West and the South. The monstrous assumption of this "feeble folk"—that have not, and in the nature of the case, from very feebleness, cannot have scarcely a dozen representatives in some entire territories, in wishing to confine the people to the few crumbs of life which they are scattering, reminds one of the vision that amazed the prophet, the "little horn" that was smaller than any other, but had "a mouth speaking great things."

We know that members alone are not the just measure of a church's strength. It must at last be found in the spirituality of its ministry and membership. Men who claim pre-eminently to be the messengers of the new covenant, the duly authorized representatives of Christ, are expected to make good their apostolic boast by purity, by knowledge, by patience, by the armor of righteousness, by hunger and nakedness, by watching and fasting, by faith, by the power of God, by the Holy Ghost, by the whole demonstrative force which writes upon the hearts of the people the commendation and seal of a divinely appointed ministry. Is there anything of this spiritual power and life, in any unusual, striking degree, resting upon the "apostolical succession" divines of the Episcopal Church?

Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island, stated in a speech in London, during the recent Pan-Anglican convention, in evidence of the "attractiveness" of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, that sixty per cent. of its membership, and a still larger proportion of its ministry, were received from other bodies of Protestants. This statement accords with the facts in this part of the country. Six out of every ten Episcopal clergymen in Louisiana have been members of the Methodist Church, probably began to preach as Methodists, and were converted at a Methodist altar; of the other four-tenths it is possible that three were once Baptists or Presbyterians, and the remaining tenth may be set down as being Episcopalians from the beginning. It is singular that while the Holy Spirit supplies other churches with "teachers, apostles, and prophets" from their own ranks, He should always go outside of the Episcopal Church to recruit its ministry. This is the more remarkable inasmuch as this church makes a particularly strong stand upon the superior claims of its clergy to be the divinely appointed New Testament ministry. One would a priori conclude that the Spirit would confirm the exclusive claims for the divine right of its bishops by raising up out of its membership an abundant supply of preachers. But the fact is, and remains to be explained, that it is the only church that has not vitality enough to raise its own ministry. This inability to propagate itself is in singular contrast with its immense assumption to be the only church possessing an unbroken Episcopal personal succession from the apostles. God has implanted a law in the feeblest of his creatures, in the smallest of seeds, providing for their continuance by a force from within themselves; to have denied it to them would have been to constitute them only so many variable forms of lingering death.

It may be set down as self-evident that no church can be stronger than its ministry. The first "gifts" which the ascended Saviour gave to men is declared by the apostle to have been "apostles," "prophets," "evangelists," "pastors and teachers," "for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." (Eph. 4.; 8-11.) When these fail we may expect all else in a church to fail. So that we are not surprised to learn that as the bishops of the Episcopal Church are driven to other churches to look for some one to fill their parishes, so its clergy are compelled to recruit their membership by peering into and prowling about other folds. They keep such close watch upon all that are weary of foot, or limping, as to remind one of Charles Wesley's description of a more formidable adversary:

> "He seizes every straggling soul
> As his own lawful prey."

It has become a settled policy with these high-churchmen, from the greatest to the least, from the prelate to the last feeble neophyte, (and some are very feeble,) to approach the most venerable of other churches, whether of the ministry or laity, to impertinently intrude and press their own claims to be regarded as the only church and the only clergy "by divine right." They indeed do prove that they are the true successors of a very ancient ecclesiastical body, for they "compass sea and land to make one proselyte." Their bishops set the example in its most offensive forms; at one point recently sending word that, if the preacher would come over he could still occupy the same church, which could be re-consecrated, and things move on without an hiatus; at another stating that it was not worth while to build a church, that very soon the Methodist house would belong to them. Now such puerilities might be set down as the exhilarating outflow of one who suddenly finds himself an Episcopos, and knows not what to be at to express it, and as furnishing some explanation of why it was that one who evidently feels himself to be so strongly called to this work and order of a bishop should have only arrived at it after forty-two distinct buffetings; but their frequency and seriousness forbid such a rendering.

Whenever any of our people are approached by an Episcopal clergyman and pressed to join that church we recommend them to ask the following questions: 1. Have you ever been a Methodist? 2. Were you ever converted? 3. Have you ever been a Methodist preacher? 4. Why did you leave the Methodist Church? 5. Have you found the means of grace and the associations where you now are more favorable to piety and holiness of heart than you found them to be in the Methodist Church? 6. Do you believe yourself to be one of the "only true successors" of the apostles?—The chances are eight to ten that he has been a Methodist, and does believe himself to be a regular "successor." After stating to him your own providential conversion to God as a Methodist, and remarking that you have not yet exhausted all the means of grace and the helps afforded you in your own church, and that when you have, and look round for one that can afford you greater opportunities for a more spiritual activity, you will then examine carefully the claims of the Protestant Episcopal Church—you will then be prepared and ready to ask him the seventh and last question, to wit: "You have read Esop's fables: well, do you not remember that it was the last bray that dissipated the lion's skin?"

The Saviour tore off the mask from the Pharisees. Their broad phylacteries, dalmaticas, and chasubles covered a nature saintly in its assertions, but which at heart was intolerant and exclusive.—"Woe unto you, for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." It is only necessary to observe these modern high-church men to understand that not only history, but Satan repeats himself;" therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness."

WASHING CLOTHES.

Dr. Clark says that the daughter of Pharaoh had gone down to the Nile to superintend the week's washing when she discovered Moses; and this single remark of the learned commentator brings the whole subject of washing machines legitimately within the scope of a religious journal. Washing clothes is a sufficiently venerable institution, even though it were not the employment of ancient queens. Yet most men have a secret dread of the wash-tub. And since the Constitution of Arkansas has placed the whole of mankind upon a single plane, there is no telling where we are—who is to wash, and who to vote; but in any contingency we wish to call notice to an excellent machine, which is intended to take off the unpleasant edge of this weekly duty—the Louisiana Washing Machine, made by Mr. E. T. Edson, corner of Perdido and Franklin streets. It combines strength and simplicity, with the other requisites for quick, cheap, and thorough work.

CHRISTIAN INFLUENCE.

The handful of disciples who surrounded the Saviour were, without doubt, greatly surprised when he declared that they were "the salt of the earth," and "the light of the world." In the highest sense Christ is the light, and the word and the Holy Spirit are the great illuminating agents. The church, with its ordinances and its aggregate of means and forces, is a mighty instrument for the salvation of men. Personal religious influence, however connected and related to all of these, is something to be separated, and estimated by itself. The circulation of the Bible, the maintenance of the church and ministry, and the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon both cannot be resolved and distributed to the account of individuals. Neither can the results be measured by the faith and purity of all who have contributed to them. The unconverted man's dollar furnishes as good a Bible puts as many bricks in a church, and sends the missionary as far as that of the most devout Christian.

The personal religious influence of the living Christian is thus distinct from what his money has done and what he himself is doing through the proxies or organizations with which he is connected. The salt is in the man; the light is what the man is; and his mission is to regenerate and save by contact with the living corruption and darkness around him. Apart from all other considerations, Christ's life, as an example of moral perfection, has exerted an untold influence upon the convictions of the world. The doctrines and the miracles, without that life, would be stripped of much of their power to win the assent and affections of men. That illustration of the ideal of gospel excellence is no small part of the gospel itself. Beyond what Christ taught, and what he did in the work of redemption, is what he was and what he lived. Who can estimate the power of that perfect human life?

In their order and degree consider the catalogue of those of whom the world was not worthy. What they were as inspired messengers of God, and what their messages were, and the miracles they wrought, are not more to us than the graces and virtues they displayed in the actual conflicts of life. The cloud of witnesses which compass us about is, indeed, the sum of godly examples, attesting not by inspiration and miracle, but by the heroism of a faith triumphing over sin. The choicest lessons which we gather from the inspired characters are those which we feel have nothing of miracle or inspiration in them. They lie in those passages where the prophet and the apostle are lost in the man, battling with his own infirmities and corruptions, fighting against the world, suffering in the flesh, and sustained by such grace as all may have. The power of Christ's life is in its humanity, where we may suppose the divinity to be in abeyance, "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." In like manner Abraham and Paul penetrate us with the grandeur and glory of their faith in proportion as we place them, in their trials, upon an equality with ourselves.

We thus reach at once an element and a secret of Christian influence, the gospel ideal of character exhibited in uninspired example. There is a peculiar force in this in its bearings upon the hearts and consciences of irreligious men. It is difficult to persuade them that Christ is a model for them, or that the attainments and graces of inspired characters are for them. These examples are held at a reverent distance, and as altogether above the plane of ordinary mortal life. Even the written histories of our eminent saints have something, if not of the apocryphal, yet of the distant and the impracticable about them. Besides, the paucity of these exemplars of a high order of religious attainment is an element of weakness. The suspicion is natural to the unbelieving mind that there was something exceptional in these cases, and that the partiality of admirers and the lapse of time have invested these names with a halo of unreal and unattainable sanctity.

If in order to convince skeptical and unbelieving minds, we could point not only to the "only Christ Jesus," but to multitudes of living men who have put on Christ, who have the mind that was in Christ, who cannot see that the argument would be powerfully reinforced? If, in vindication of the gospel as of divine and saving efficacy, we could challenge attention not alone to the conversion of Paul and those of Pentecost, but to manifold examples of a high order of renewed life in all the circles of society, the demonstration, if not more complete, would be more convincing. An actual Christian life in the midst of men and things, as they are around us now, is more than a biography or an obituary to those who come in contact with it. "A living dog is better than a dead lion." A living Christian in contact with wicked and unbelieving men can do more to convince and persuade and demonstrate than a pyramid of biographies and evidences. The common every-day world needs this kind of gospel assertion, and this practical utterance of its divine authority. Without it the religion of the heart remains a mere theory for dead and empty declamation.

In this aspect of Christian influence every believer ought to be an evangelist of the highest order. Not simply to preach through his preacher, and through the agencies his money may sustain, but through himself, as ordained to the greatest of all the gospel ministries. This honor and this ministry is put upon us all. It demands deep spirituality, salt that has not lost its savor, and light that is not darkened nor eclipsed by a loose and careless conversation.

It is a ministry not only to which all of God's children are ordained, but one which claims and sanctifies all the conditions and relations of life. Zeal sometimes may partake of bigotry and fanaticism, but true zeal is simply fidelity. Social connections and influence are frequently, are often and generally thrown away; and the opportunities in business pursuits are religiously wasted. In the associations of friendship, of kindred connections and of allowable pleasures, our business to save souls and to promote the cause of religion is too much, if not altogether, neglected. And yet it is in these circumstances that our influence is chiefly to be exerted for Christ. Here is the real work of the Christian's daily life, to press everything personal, social and industrial into the service of Christ, and make them tributary to his glory. In all of these conditions the faithful Christian is a gospel illustrated, a Bible demonstration, and an apostle to the craft, calling or circle in which he moves.

There is much guilty reticence and cowardly neutrality on the part of professors of religion in the use of opportunities and means of building up the church and winning souls to Christ. Servants, children, friends, and neighbors are left in ignorance of any concern we may have about them, and these relations of authority and influence are never thought of as grounds of peculiar accountability to God. Without judging others, we seriously apprehend there is grave delinquency amongst ourselves in this matter. With better principles and a far better object, we ought to have as much zeal as the bigoted Pharisee. A more enlightened, but a not less consuming devotion to the church ought to be ours. The power and necessity of individual example, and effort, and responsibility cannot be too strongly stated. Without inspiration and without miraculous gifts charity and its fruits in living men are the evidences which the world demands.

THEOLOGICAL PREACHING.

The conviction has been gaining ground of late, with some at least, that a more decided theological element would be a source of power in the pulpit. The matter is, to say the least, worthy of serious consideration. The almost entire absence of doctrinal teaching is one of the most noticeable features of the modern pulpit. One seldom hears in our churches what might with any propriety be called a theological discourse. The reason we will not undertake to give, but the fact is undeniable. It is certainly a question whether this deficiency of doctrinal preaching is a source of weakness or of strength to the pulpit—whether we gain in point of attractiveness as much as we lose in real power by this course.

Many reasons might be mentioned in favor of giving to the discourses of the pulpit a more decidedly theological character; as, e. g., that the study of theological truth elevates and enlarges the mind of the preacher, and so contributes to his power and efficiency in the pulpit discourse, by increasing a wider range of subjects, each requiring distinct and definite treatment—that it instructs and edifies the hearers as no other method of preaching can so fully do.

To urge these reasons, however, there is one consideration not so obvious, nor so likely to be admitted, to which we would call attention, and that is, that theological preaching—by which we mean the discussion of the leading doctrines of the Christian faith—is, when rightly and well done, one of the surest ways of interesting the audience. It gives people something to think of—something definite and tangible—something for them to believe or disbelieve; in either case their attention is aroused and their interest awakened. It is a great mistake to suppose that people will be interested only in flashy and sensational discourses, or in goodish commonplaces of pulpit exhortation, which some sharp critic has very aptly styled "Gospel and water."

In Leak county, Mississippi, February 13, 1868, by Rev. H. H. Montgomery, Mr. John F. Ford, son of the late Rev. Washington Ford, and Miss Mary Amelia Watkins.

OBITUARIES.

Died, January 18, 1868, at the residence of her husband, Col. E. L. Wailes, in Catahoula parish, Mrs. MARY J. WAILES, daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth Miller.

The subject of this notice was born near Monroe, Louisiana, October 31, 1829. Having lost her parents in early childhood, she was adopted and reared by her uncle, the late James Miller, of Tensas parish, Louisiana.

During a revival of religion at Natchez, in 1844, conducted by Rev. Benj. Jones, the writer, then a little boy, was present at one of the meetings, when several young ladies of Mrs. Spear's school professed conversion. Among them he noticed particularly one lovely face, radiant with heavenly light—luminous as an angel's. She shouted and sang the praises of Him who had redeemed her, and, child as I was, I thought I had never seen a lovelier sight. On inquiry I learned that the young lady was Miss Mary Miller, of Waterproof. An intimate acquaintance afterward of eighteen years confirmed the belief that this was a genuine and thorough work of divine grace. Her pious walk and godly conversation ever adorned the profession she then made. I have seen her often since, in joy and in sorrow, in the house of mourning and in the house of rejoicing, and on all occasions the same spirit pervaded her life, tempered her mirth and soothed her anguish. Her kind and amiable heart, her sprightly and cheerful disposition, rendered her the centre of attraction to a large circle of friends, while her consistent and aggressive Christian character made her a chief ornament and support of the church to which she belonged. But in nothing did she more clearly show forth the praises of Him that had called her than in the fortitude and resignation with which she bore the reverse of fortune that came upon her, in common with so many, as the results of our recent disastrous history. When robbed of every comfort and grossly insulted by the brutal soldiery, she brought no railing accusation, but suffered with meekness and patience, as seeing Him who is invisible. Though accustomed to every luxury and comfort, she took up the burdens of an altered destiny without a murmur or complaint.

Her death was preceded by a long and painful illness, during which she manifested no symptom of impatience, but with joyful resignation submitted herself to the will of Him who doeth all things well. For herself she entertained no wish to live. But for a time it grieved her to part with her little ones, and to leave their care and education to other than a mother's hands. But she came, at last, to trust them implicitly to their all merciful Father. Just before death her husband asked her, if she still put her trust in God. Raising her hand and looking steadily in his face, she said, almost with her dying breath: "In my Father's house are many mansions." He then thought that certainly there was one reserved for her. She answered: "I feel that it is so." Thus lived and died one of the purest and loveliest characters it has ever been my privilege to know. She was truly another witness for Jesus—another bright attestation of our holy religion to beautify the life and glorify the death of its followers.

"May we meet beyond the river,
Where the surges cease to roll,
And in all the bright forever
Sorrow never shall reach the soul."

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, a school of good standing, which is destined to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

PRICE ADVANCED—PAR AND INTEREST.

The Central Pacific Railroad,

THE BEST AND PRINCIPAL PORtion of the NATIONAL TRUNK LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT, is being rapidly carried forward by an unprecedented working force, and it is reasonably certain that the continuous overland railroad connection from New York to San Francisco will be made in 1870.

The United States Government furnishes, upon a subordinate and contingent lien, half the means for constructing the main stem line; and besides an absolute grant of 12,800 acres of valuable public lands per mile, the Central Pacific Railroad Company have received from California sundry donations and concessions worth more than $3,000,000. The available resources of this company are therefore abundant for the purpose, amounting to $77,000,000 on the first 736 miles of the line, including loans secured by a first mortgage upon the whole property, to the same amount only as the United States subsidy bonds.

The results already attained, although under comparatively unfavorable circumstances, afford substantial ground for believing the Central Pacific to be the Most Favored, Productive and Valuable Railroad Enterprise in the Country.

In consequence of the large and rapidly increasing demand, the price of these bonds has been advanced, and the company are now offering for sale a limited amount of their

First Mortgage Six per Cent. Bonds,

Principal and interest payable in gold coin, in sums of $1,000 each, at par, and accrued interest from January 1st, in currency.

These bonds, it is believed, possess the elements of safety, reliability and profit in a greater degree than any other class of corporate securities now offered, and are therefore very desirable for steady investments of surplus capital.

Investors will bear in mind the following advantages:

I. They are the first mortgage on one of the most valuable and productive lines of railroad in the world.

II. The actual earnings from local business in 1867 were more than four times the annual interest engagement.

III. The hard part of the work is now done, and the prospects of rapid completion are favorable.

IV. The company have liberal subsidies, which enable them to prosecute the work with great vigor.

V. The management has been exceedingly prudent and frugal.

VI. There is already a large and growing settlement on the completed and graded line.

VII. The lands promise to be of immense value, 37,138 acres having been already sold.

VIII. Both principal and interest are explicitly made payable in gold coin.

IX. Both the aggregate amount of issue and their standing in Europe will insure for them continued activity and a high rank among standard securities.

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of from ten to fifteen per cent in addition.

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return Express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the LITTLE ROSE.

She comes with fairy footsteps—
Softly their echoes fall—
And her shadow plays like summer shade
Across the garden wall.
The golden light is dancing bright
'Mid the mazes of her hair,
And her fair young locks are waving free
To the wooing of her hair.

Like a sportful fawn she bounds eth
So gleefully and gay,
As a wild rose-bud she careth
The burden of a song.
The summer flowers are clustering thick
Around her dancing feet,
And on her cheek the summer breeze
Is breathing soft and sweet.

The very sunbeams seem to linger
Above the holy head,
And the wild flowers at her coming
Their richest fragrance shed.
And oh! how lovely light and fragrance
Mingle in the life within:
Oh! how fondly do they nestle
Round the soul that knows no sin.

She comes—the spirit of our childhood—
A thing of mortal birth,
Yet bearing still the breath of Heaven
To redeem her from the earth.
She comes in bright-robed innocence,
Unsullied by blot or blight,
And passeth by our wayward path,
A gleam of angel light.

Oh! blessed things are children—
The gifts of heavenly love;
They stand betwixt our world-hearts
And better things above;
They link us with the spirit world
Of purity and truth,
And keep our hearts still fresh and young
With the presence of their youth.

THE BROOK AND THE BEAR.

The following dialogue between Old Humphrey and young Edward will give the reader some amusement, and perhaps afford him a little instruction:

Old Humphrey—Come here, Edward, I come here, for I want to talk with you. I want you to look at the waters of the brook. How strong they are! They rush over the stones as though nothing could stop them.

Edward—Yes, they come tumbling from the upper ground yonder, at a race rate; they would turn a mill-wheel round famously.

Old Humphrey—But suppose that instead of making the brook turn round a mill-wheel, you wanted to make the brook itself turn round; which way should you set about it?

Edward—That would be no easy matter, set about it as I would. The first thing to be done would be to get a great number of men, perhaps a hundred, with spades and wheelbarrows.

Old Humphrey—And how could you turn away the current with men, and spades and wheelbarrows?

Edward—Why by filling the wheelbarrows with dirt, and then stopping the course of the stream with it. I warrant that would turn the brook, if anything would.

Old Humphrey—But as you could only put in part of the dirt at one time, what would prevent the water from carrying it away as fast as you put it in?

Edward—I never thought of that. I see that plan would never do. But suppose a number of trees were felled for the purpose, to lay across the brook; or, what would do still better than that, suppose cart loads of stones were flung into the stream. That plan would be sure to turn aside the water.

Old Humphrey—Well I rather think it would; but there would be no small trouble in dragging stones enough to effect your purpose. There is a much better and a much easier plan.

Edward—Then I should like to know it. Please to tell me how you would set about it.

Old Humphrey—You shall hear. While you, with your hundred men, were straining your backs in getting together and hauling the stones to fill up this wide part of the brook I would take two or three stout fellows with me up to its source, or where it is very narrow; and there, perhaps, we might do more toward turning the brook in one hour than you and all your men would do in a day.

Edward—Ah! that you would. That is a plan that never came into my head. I shall know how to turn the current of a brook in future.

Old Humphrey—It is well to know how to do things, and still better to know the best way of doing them. The other day I read of a grizzly bear doing a deal of mischief. The grizzly bear is the most savage and fearful of all bears, and I was thinking which would be the best way of getting a tame grizzly bear, if such a creature were really wanted. How would you set about it, Edward?

Edward—I must first catch a bear before I could make him tame; and to do that would puzzle me.

Old Humphrey—But suppose you had caught him; how should you go to work then?

Edward—Why, have him chained up so fast that he could hardly stir, and give him very little food; and if he growled fiercely, and made a noise, he should be beaten with a thick stick. I should tame him soon that way, I am thinking.

Old Humphrey—So far from it that I rather fear you would make him more savage than ever. While he was chained up tight he might not do any mischief; but how do you think it would be if you were to unchain him, and let him have his own way.

Edward—Very true. I am afraid that he would be as bad as ever. How would you manage him?

Old Humphrey—Why I should have nothing at all to do with him, for I should go to work in a different manner altogether. If I wanted a tame grizzly bear, instead of catching an old one, and then taming him, I would catch a young one, and bring him up tame. By using him with judgment and kindness his savage fierceness would be kept under; and thus I should have a tame bear, when you, according to your plan, would only have a wild one.

Edward—That you would. Your ways of turning a brook and getting a tame bear are worth a hundred of mine; but I should never have thought of them if you had not told me of them.

Old Humphrey—With regard to turning the brook, there is one thing which I have not mentioned. A brook gets broader the farther it runs, and this is occasioned by other smaller streams running into it. In turning a brook, then, it would be necessary to stop up all these small streams, as well as the one it first came from.

Edward—So it would. I should have forgotten that. But now tell me what set you a talking about a brook and a bear? You always have a meaning in what you say, and I rather think that you mean something now.

Old Humphrey—Well, I do mean something, Edward; for my hairs are grey, and I ought not to trifle with time. My remaining days are running away like the waters of the brook. There is, as it were, but a step between me and death; and therefore, while I can, let me try to impress a useful lesson on your mind. You remember what I said about turning the brook, and all that I said about taming the bear?

Edward—Yes; I remember every word.

Old Humphrey—The waters of the brook are strong, and the rage of the grizzly bear is fearful and dangerous; but sinful passions of the heart are more headstrong than the waters of the brook, and more dangerous than the rage of the wildest bear. The best way, then, is to begin early to conquer them, while they are young and weak, and not to permit them to grow old and strong.

Edward—I dare say you are right.

Old Humphrey—Thousands who have lived wicked lives, and died unhappy deaths, leaving this world without hope of a better, might, had they been taught early to fear God and keep his commandments, have been a credit and a blessing to those around them, and have ended their lives in peace, looking forward to a world of glory.

Edward—Yes, that is very likely.

Old Humphrey—Every child should be trained up in the knowledge of eternal things; to hate sin; to reverence the word of God; to believe that Jesus Christ died for sinners; and love him as the Redeemer. His bad passions would then be kept under, instead of gaining strength like the waters of the brook and the savage fury of the bear. Remember your Creator in the days of your youth, Edward; for should you grow up to be a bad man, with bad passions strong within you, it would be easier to tame a grizzly bear than to tame you; ay, easier to stop the current of the brook in the widest part than to stop the current of your sinful inclinations.

Edward—I see now what you mean. I thought we were not talking about the brook and about the bear for nothing.

Old Humphrey—I hope and trust, then, that the words of an old man will reach your young heart, so that you may know, and see, and feel that youth is the time to serve the Lord. May God, of his goodness and grace, control in you all that is evil; lead you into all that is good; guide you by his counsel, and after that receive you into glory.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Western Rural, who has had experience in raising and feeding Hungarian grass, says that if cut as soon as it begins to blossom, it is prime hay for any kind of stock. If the seed is allowed to mature, it should never be fed to horses or colts. It will either kill or stiffen them up in a short time. It is a very exhausting crop if allowed to ripen the seed, but makes fine feed for neat cattle.

FARM AND GARDEN.

HOW TO RAISE CARROTS.

A large proportion of American farmers fail in their efforts to grow a remunerating crop of carrots, in the majority of instances from not understanding how to manage the seed and the young plants. The usual practice is to sow carrot seed so early in the growing season that noxious weeds, six or eight inches high, cover the ground before the young carrots have attained sufficient size to enable laborers to see the rows. The immense labor required to weed carrots tends to discourage farmers from attempting to grow a crop of roots. But if they were accustomed to manage differently, a crop of carrots could be grown at an expense of only a few cents per bushel. We frequently meet with farmers who aver that their crop of carrots costs them not over five or six cents per bushel. As it is not practicable to follow the directions required to produce a heavy crop of roots the present season, we will do the best we can under the circumstances. Do not plant the seed too early. Prepare the ground thoroughly, and manure it heavily. Let the land be plowed deep, twice or thrice, if it is not foul. Then about the twentieth of May, or the first of June, scarify the surface for the purpose of exterminating the weeds. If the surface is at all lumpy, let the lumps be crushed with a roller. As the seeds are a long time germinating, they should be sprouted before they are planted. Then the young carrots will vegetate rapidly, and outgrow noxious weeds; and the labor of weeding the rows will be comparatively light.

Soak the seed in warm water for twenty hours. Then mingle it with fine sand in a vessel that will not hold water. Keep the sand and seed moist and warm. As soon as the seeds exhibit signs of germination, let them be planted in soil just stirred with some implement. In four or five days, if the soil be moist and warm, the carrots will appear above ground, and scarcely a weed will be seen among the plants. Unless the ground is rich and free from weeds, do not make the drills nearer than two feet, so that a horse-hoe may do almost the entire weeding. If the ground be in a poor state of fertility, a dressing of the pure superphosphate of lime, spread in a shallow drill on each side of the rows of carrots and raked in, will usually produce a bountiful crop.

When the young plants are two or three inches high let the thinning be performed with a sharp, broad hoe, worked across the drills, leaving three or four plants in a cluster. During wet and lowery weather, when laborers cannot work advantageously at other employment, let the smaller carrots be pulled up, leaving one in a place, about six or eight inches apart. Managed in this manner, a crop of carrots may be raised with a small expenditure of labor.

Try half an acre, or one-fourth of an acre. With ordinary cultivation, and land of only moderate fertility, six hundred bushels of carrots may be grown on an acre. For feeding horses and cows a bushel of carrots is worth as much as a bushel of oats, when fed in connection with a liberal amount of meal.—N. Y. Independent.

From the American Farmer.

TOBACCO CROP.

The preparation of last year's crops for market is still to be carried on diligently, as the condition of the season may allow. The bulks which have lain some time should be examined occasionally, as they are very liable, when the spring weather approaches, to get warm. When this occurs the quality of the tobacco is injured as to color, and it gets a bad smell, which it never is entirely rid of. Whenever it becomes the least warm, or gets even very soft in the bulk, it should be at once moved, as it is then approaching that condition in which it is soon materially damaged. If it is desirable to have it soon in order for packing, the leaves should be shaken apart as each bundle is taken from the bulk, and hung on sticks until thoroughly dried; then it is in condition to be packed whenever it becomes soft enough for handling. A neater method, but taking more time, is to lay the bundles lightly, after shaking, into a bulk of two courses, the tails somewhat overlapping, and let them lie till well dried.

The purpose of these several handlings is to get the tobacco into that condition in which it is thoroughly cured, and will keep any length of time in the hogsheads. The surest indication of its being well cured, or "conditioned," as the term is, is that peculiar sweet smell with which experience soon makes one familiar. Until it gets that there is no security for its keeping.

Every opportunity should be availed of to prepare the ground for tobacco seeds. Whenever it is clear of snow the brush for burning may be gathered and brought to the bed; the ground may be raked off and put in readiness for burning. When it is dry enough to be worked, let it be hauled on and dug and fine sized sown. Winter seeding will be found to produce earlier plants, and we have so much work got off our hands.

The Lavender Fields of Michigan.

Surrey may be said to have almost a monopoly of the lavender trade; and the quantity grown in the county may be guessed from the fact that some 5,000 acres of ground are devoted to its culture alone. Kent grows hardly any, and Cambridgeshire and Hertfordshire are but unpretending rivals. We ought to mention here that lavender is now more extensively grown in the neighborhood of Carshalton and on the Epsom Downs than at Mitcham even, for of course they are at a greater distance from town. It is planted in November, in slips from the old roots, and will stand without removal from two to four years, being fed with the ordinary farm-yard manure. It is very susceptible of injury from frost or heavy rain, and much harm has been done with this year's crop from both of these causes. It is generally admitted by those whose recollections date a long time back that the crops now-a-days are nothing like so abundant as they used to be, which is, perhaps, owing to the partial exhaustion of the soil and consequent weakening of the plants. Of course, this and the increasing importation of French oil must have very sensibly affected the trade, but the English oil is considered so superior for most purposes that it must always rule the market. The lavender water, after the oil has been extracted, is given to the men as a perquisite, and sold by them at something like sixpence a gallon. It is reaped with a saw-edged sickle by hand, put then tied into mats, and carried direct to the still. The process, therefore, is extremely simple, and bears no comparison to that of hop picking, the gayest of all harvest gatherings. Still the lavender fields, when in full bloom, are a glorious sight, and have a charm peculiarly their own. Which ever way the eye may wander, field after field is spread out in interminable beauty, and its effect, not easily forgotten, is worth remembering.—Country Life.

THE FRUIT GARDEN.—In carrying on the operations of spading up around fruit trees it is advisable to examine the roots of all luxuriant-growing trees, and remove some of the largest. We would, however, advise a regular system of root-pruning, by which means the roots can be kept near the surface. Fruit trees exposed to winds should be well secured to stakes. In preparing the ground for new orchards, remember to drain thoroughly. Nowhere is this advice more necessary than in the orchard, for notwithstanding apples and pears are fond of adhesive soils, they will never prove profitable where water is allowed to accumulate.

Old apple and pear trees may be greatly improved by judicious pruning and by applying manure at the extremities of their roots, and by a good top dressing of well rotted barn-yard manure.

Whatever arrears of winter work remain should be done with as little delay as possible, or the consequences will be serious. Finish all pruning of trees and bushes. Make a thorough clearance of the prunings, decayed weeds, etc., from orchards and fruit gardens. To keep frost from newly planted fruit trees, etc., mulch about them with decayed dung. Remember that loose soil admits less frost than that which is trodden hard.—American Farmer.

FARM ACCOUNTS.—Mr. Wallace, of the Utica Herald, in a late agricultural discussion, strongly and properly advocates the absolute necessity of keeping careful books of account of the operations on the farm. He says very justly that many farmers go on from year to year, raising and selling without having any correct knowledge of the profit or loss of the different crops. It is natural that every farmer should know exactly what crops pay and what don't. He says he has known farmers to grow oats year after year, and selling it at thirty cents per bushel, who did not know they were doing it at a loss. This state of things ought to be remedied, but it can only be by farmers, who, just as much as the manufacturer, the merchant, or the storekeeper, should have his regular books, where the whole operations of the farm should be distinctly stated, and his receipts and expenditures appear to the last cent.—American Farmer.

AN Ashtabula Co., Ohio, farmer is now engaged in buying sheep, believing they are a good investment at present prices. In one case recently he was allowed to pick 50 young ewes out of a flock of several hundred, at $1 25 each.

The Institution was founded about 1830, and incorporated in 1831, and has ever since been conducted on the same principles. Its character is established. The present Principal has been connected with it for twenty years. The corps of teachers is a full one, and, upon the abandonment of the present, another will be employed.

The young pupils have a separate department, and receive the same attention to their comfort and progress as the older ones. Exercises are continued through the year in Penmanship, Elocution, Orthography, and in Reading and Composition, especially the Art of Composition and Arithmetic.

The buildings are spacious, retired, well shaded, and well furnished with all the comforts of a good home. The location is proverbially healthy, and good society. Trains of cars from the north and south will be met at Hankinson's Ferry, on the Mississippi Central Railroad, every day.

TENTH SESSION.

The exercises of this school will be resumed on Wednesday, Oct. 2, 1867.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a thorough education.

Particular care is bestowed on the moral and social culture of the pupils.

There is but one session in the year, and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, washbasin, mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a satchel for dirty clothes.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days absence at the beginning of term is a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Tuition, Board and Tuition per session, $360.
Pay terms.—$180 in advance—balance 1st March.
Tuition Day Scholars, per session, $75 00 payable—one half in advance—balance 1st March.
Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the School demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

It is an unfailing remedy in all cases of Neuralgia, Facials, often effecting a perfect cure in less than twenty-four hours, from the use of no more than two or three pills.

No other form of Neuralgia or Nervous Disease is failed to yield to this wonderful remedial agent.

Even the severest cases of Chronic Neuralgia and general nervous derangements, of many years standing,—affecting the entire system, if use for a few days, or a few weeks at the utmost, always affords the most lasting relief, and very rarely fails to produce a complete and permanent cure.

It contains no drug or other materials in the slightest degree injurious, even to the most delicate system, and can always be used with perfect safety.

It has long been in constant use by many of our most eminent physicians, who give it their unanimous and unqualified approval.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1859.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev. E. C. Dargans, D. D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 32d parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries. Donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership? The payment of $25 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not, to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S. by forming or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connection with the Society as the Lord has prospered them, according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heinousness of the Great Reformation. No mutilating of the Word; no tampering with the text; no marks, note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. n25 1y.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church south in 1847. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, by means of The Hot Blast Invented by the Yeddiah's of the Oven, the temperature of the Hot Blast is so increased that a large supply of heat is never necessary, as the Oven can be shared, Ventilated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a degree of

At Least Fifty per Cent. less Consumed

With any other Stove;

and at the same time be rendered the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. The Roasting, the Tin Kitchen and Broiling, known as the "Dutch Oven," are considered unsurpassed, and the Tin Kitchen is especially adapted to The Good Samaritan, as the heat above the heated surface of the Stove is the same as that in the Oven, and the process of cooking can be seen.

That these results are always produced necessarily to those baked in the Stove Oven, we leave no one will deny, and we therefore do not think it necessary to dwell on the advantages which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front of the Fire Pot, a very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and has avoided the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to command it to the approbation of the Operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, The Good Samaritan to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, we also have a large and complete assortment of Cooking Stoves, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1,50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents,

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not actuated from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center tables of a Christian people.

PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC,

Or, Vegetable Medicine.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therefore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

Importers and Dealers, Wholesale and Retail,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The principal feature of the mark t since our last issue is the rapid advance and excited demand for our leading staple, the former showing a net improvement of 3¾c. per lb, and the latter resulting in the largest sales yet reported this season. The cause of this favorable movement—the running down in stocks of goods, the revival of the demand for consumption, and the probable supply being much less than has been estimated on the other side—have not been unforeseen here and incited the fortunate speculative movement to which we recently referred. The fact is the staple has been too low throughout the season, most of the crop having netted less than the cost of production, and this favorable turn may be regarded as legitimate, and fully justified by the law of supply and demand.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed at a decline of ¼ to ½c., Ordinary being quoted at 16¾ to 17¼c., Good Ordinary at 17¾ to 18¼, Low Middling at 19 to 19¼, Middling at 19¾ to 20, and Strict Middling at 20½, since which, under the influence of the exciting news referred to above, the demand has been active and prices have advanced 3¾c. per lb. On Saturday the movement commenced with a better feeling and more general inquiry, without any marked improvement, although the early business was mostly at the outside rates of the day previous, but the subsequent receipt of the Liverpool telegrams gave an active impulse to the demand, resulting in sales of 6,500 bales, at an advance of ¾c., Low Middling closing at 19¾ to 20c., and Middling at 20½c. On Monday the telegrams published in the morning papers, and those received during the early part of the day, caused an unusual excitement, under which the sales summed up 11 500 bales, at irregular prices, showing, however, an average advance of 2¼ to 2½c. per lb., being the heaviest business and the largest advance reported this year. On Tuesday, under the influence of still more favorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, factors advanced their pretensions about 1c. per lb., but finding that the high prices asked had compelled several buyers to withdraw, they lowered their views a fraction. During the day 7,000 bales changed hands, at an average improvement of ¾c. on Monday's quotations.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 25,000 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 14,442 bales, against 15,345 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 903 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 412,418 bales, against 531,476 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 201,948 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 78,486 bales to Great Britain, of 64,525 to France, and of 109,114 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	20 to 21
Good Ordinary	21½ to 22
Low Middling	22½ to 23
Middling	23½ to 23¾
Strict Middling	24 to —

SUGAR.—The demand has fallen off since our last review, and prices for some grades have declined ¼ to ½c. per lb. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 300 hogsheads, at 12¾c. per lb. for Good Common, 13½ for Good Fair, 14 to 14¼ for Fully Fair, 14½ to 14¾ for Prime, and 16 to 16½ for Yellow Clarified.

MOLASSES.—There has been less demand since our last review, and prices have declined 3 to 5c. per gallon. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 400 barrels, at 65c. per gallon for Common Fermenting, 70 to 72½c. for Prime Fermenting, and 75 to 80c. for Reboiled.

FLOUR.—The market has not shown much animation since our last review. The demand has been confined to the local trade, and prices have ruled more in favor of buyers. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 3,000 barrels, mostly on private terms.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

SUMMERFIELD, Ala., Feb. 8, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: From the experience of the past year we must argue favorably as to the utility of these meetings. The testimony in their favor, so far as we have heard, is almost unanimous. They have almost uniformly been seasons of great spiritual profit.—They bring together brethren from all portions of the district; they become acquainted with each other, and are made acquainted with the various plans in operation in the different portions of the district, and it affords a fine opportunity for a mutual interchange of opinion as to the most efficient plans for the improvement of the operations intended to spread abroad the knowledge of God and the increasing prosperity of all the agencies for the improvement of the church in their respective fields of labor. The gathering together of so many godly men, ministers and laymen, for a full and free interchange of opinion, can scarcely fail to produce increased knowledge of the character and plans of Methodism, and a more active and zealous cooperation in every effort undertaken for improving all her agencies for good. Long may these meetings continue to live and prosper. The thing is not, however, as some suppose, a novelty. Many years ago the General Conference established what they called a District Conference, composed, if I am not greatly mistaken, entirely of the local preachers of the district. To this body was committed the task of licensing the preachers, recommending local preachers and preachers seeking admission into the itineracy; and to this Conference it also belonged to recommend local preachers for deacons' and elders' orders. In short, this District Conference had the entire supervision of the character and conduct of the local preachers. But the General Conference, in originating this body, made one great blunder. They left the Quarterly Conference in the full possession of all its previously-enjoyed rights and powers. The Quarterly Conference could still license and recommend preachers, and try delinquent preachers, as of old. This, as ought to have been foreseen, secured, after a few years, the dissolution of the District Conference for a while. The novelty of the new arrangement attracted the attendance of the preachers; but after a little while the preachers began to say: Why should we have to take long and expensive rides to the District Conference, when the Quarterly Conference of our own circuit can do everything necessary just as well? The result was that in a very few years the District Conference went into retirement, and the Quarterly Conference resumed the exercise of all its powers as formerly. I think that the proposition for the establishment of the District Conference came from William Capers and Daniel Asbury, both of South Carolina. I don't know but it is well that the present meeting comes not by the authority of law, but is a perfectly spontaneous work. Let its friends be watchful, and avoid the introduction into its debates of anything which savors of self-importance or unkindness, otherwise its early dissolution must result.

Yours, very affectionately,

JAS. O. ANDREW.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, Feb. 21, 1868.

SIR: By virtue of the power and authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and laws of the United States, you are hereby removed from office as Secretary of the Department of War, and your functions as such will terminate with the receipt of this communication. You will transmit to Brevet Major General Lorenzo Thomas, adjutant general of the army, who has this day been authorized and empowered to act as Secretary of War ad interim, all records, books, papers and other public property now in your custody and charge. Respectfully yours,

(Signed) ANDREW JOHNSON,
President.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Washington, D. C.

The President has made the following nominations: Gen. McClellan, as minister to the court of St. James; Jas. R. Hubbell, of Ohio, minister to Ecuador; Major General George H. Thomas to be lieutenant general by brevet and general by brevet.

Colfax presented the following communication from Stanton, inclosing the President's order relieving him from office:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, Feb. 21, 1868.

SIR: Gen. Thomas has just delivered to me a copy of the inclosed order, which you will please communicate to the House of Representatives.

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Referred to the Reconstruction Committee.

Adjourned.

Immediately after reading Stanton's communication to-day, Covode moved for articles impeaching the President.

Brooks objected.

The Speaker decided that it was a privileged question, but the matter was finally referred to the Reconstruction Committee.

Stanton has not vacated the War office.

Senate still in executive session.

Gen. Thomas has officially accepted the War office ad interim, and will apply to the court to expel Stanton.

The President's message to the Senate announcing Stanton's removal was brief but decided. He acts aside from his constitutional power, on an old law which the tenure of office bill failed to repeal.

Immediately after the receipt of the President's message, Senators Thayer, Chandler, Cameron and Cottrell drove to the War Department and urged Stanton not to abandon his post. Stanton agreed to retain the office. These Senators subsequently called on Grant, and suggested what his course should be. On their return the Senate went into executive session, which has lasted seven hours.

The following resolution passed:

WHEREAS, The Senate has received and considered the communication from the President, stating that he had removed Stanton and had designated the adjutant-general of the army to act ad interim; therefore,

Resolved, That under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the President has no power to remove the Secretary of War and designate another officer to perform the duties of that office.

Copies of this resolution were sent to the parties interested.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—At four o'clock Adjutant General Thomas again attempted to enter the War Department, but armed guards at all entrances refused to pass him, saying it was specially ordered by Stanton. He declares, if the President directs, he will force an entrance. It is believed the President will order it.

Old citizens say there has not been such a popular commotion in Washington since the firing on Sumter.

The House has just adjourned at 5½ o'clock, until 7, when the debate will be resumed.

The vote on the impeachment resolution is fixed by consent for 5 o'clock on Monday next.

Republicans and Democrats all concede that the President will be impeached by a strict party vote.

The Democratic headquarters is thronged. The convention will take place at New York, July 4th. The New Yorkers are jubilant thereat, and declare for McClellan and Pendleton.

RESOLUTIONS OF IMPEACHMENT AGAINST THE PRESIDENT—A GENERAL DEBATE, ETC.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Senate.—No business. Adjourned.

House.—Eldridge moved that as it was Washington's birthday, that Washington's farewell address be read, and the House adjourn.

Peters, of Maine, objected.

The Speaker decided that it required unanimous consent.

Holman appealed, but the decision of the chair was sustained, and the motion was lost.

Half a dozen trivial matters were moved, but all objected to in retaliation, and the regular order demanded.

The bill declaring San Antonio, Texas, a port of delivery, was passed.

The motion to have the address read was resumed. Schenck objected. Ingersoll, of Illinois, proposed to postpone reading the address until next week. The House refused to adjourn by 26 to 106.

A bill punishing Federal officers for unlawful use of money or property, passed. It imprisons offenders from one to fifteen years, and fines for twice the amount lost by loans, deposits or personal use.

Stevens rose, which caused a demonstration in the galleries. The Speaker gave notice that a repetition would lead to their being cleared.

Stevens reported the following, from the Reconstructinn Committee:

Resolved, That Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors in office.

A general debate ensued.

House adjourned at half-past 5 to half-past 7.

The vote to be taken on Stevens' resolution in Monday, at 5 P. M.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Committee on Reconstruction, by vote of seven Republicans to two Democrats, decided to-day to prefer articles of impeachment against the President for his conduct respecting the removal of Stanton.

Only Brooks and Beck voted against the impeachment resolutions in the Reconstruction Committee.

After released from custody this morning, Adjutant General Thomas found his office door locked. Stanton had the key. Thomas then went to Stanton's office, finding Stanton, ten members of Congress, Generals Grant, Dent and Howard in consultation. Sentinels guarded each door, and visitors were only admitted after the cards had been inspected. Several cards were presented for Thomas, but admission refused. The President's private secretary called to see Thomas, but admission was refused. Thomas remained in Stanton's room until half-past twelve, when he left the War building. During the interview Stanton notified Thomas that he would not give up the Secretaryship or obey Thomas as Secretary of War, and that he had instructed all employes of the Department not to obey Thomas.

At 2 o'clock Thomas had a prolonged interview with the President, during which the President said he desired to test the matter legally in the courts.

The Democratic National Executive Committee named New York as the place, and the 4th of July as the time for holding the National Convention. The committee-men from the Southern States had a full votee in the committee.

The President's impeachment by the House is undoubted.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The debate is progressing with spirit but dignity, and the excitement is subsiding. The President will take no arbitrary measures. He is content with the present shape of affairs. The matter is now with the courts.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—This evening's Express says a canvas of the House has been made, which shows that the resolution will undoubtedly pass by a strict party vote.

The day was generally observed as a holiday. No domestic markets.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The following is a truthful account of the scene at the War office: About 11.30 A. M. Gen. Lorenzo Thomas, having just been released on bail by Judge Carter, presented himself at the door of the War Department and told Mr. Stanton that he would like to see him. Mr. Stanton told him to proceed with anything he wanted to say. Gen. Thomas remarked that he had come to discharge his duties as Secretary of War ad interim, having been ordered to do so by the President of the United States. Mr. Stanton replied that he could do no such thing, and ordered him to his room to perform his duties as adjutant general. Gen. Thomas replied that he had been ordered by the President to act as Secretary of War, and he intended to do so.

Mr. Stanton again replied that he should act, and again ordered him to his own room, and denied the power of the President to make any such order. Gen. Thomas said he would not go; that he should obey the orders of the President, and not the orders of Mr. Stanton. Mr. Stanton remarked: "As Secretary of War, I order you to repair to your own place as adjutant general."

Gen. Thomas—"I shall not do so."

Mr. Stanton said—"Then you may stay there as long as you please if the President orders you, but you cannot act as Secretary of War."

Gen. Thomas—"I shall act as Secretary of War."

Gen. Thomas then withdrew into a room opposite, being Gen. Shriver's room.

Mr. Stanton immediately following him, after some conversation said: "Then you claim to be here as Secretary of War, and refuse to obey my orders?"

Gen. Thomas—"I do so, sir. I shall require the mails of the War Department to be delivered to me, and shall transact all business of the War Department."

At this juncture Gen. Grant and aid came in. Gen. Grant said, playfully, to Stanton, "I am surprised to find you here. I supposed you would be at my headquarters for protection."

The President sent a message to the Senate, to-day, giving additional reasons for the removal of Stanton. Among them, the refusal of recognition of the President's authority or consultation, and general insubordination.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Senate, after a seven hours' executive session, resolved that the President had no right to remove Stanton.

At 8 o'clock this morning Gen. Thomas was arrested on a warrant issued by Judge Carter on the affidavit of Stanton, for violation of the fifth section of the tenure of office bill.

Both Houses met to day for business. The excitement is very great. Thomas was released on bail of $5,000, to appear on Wednesday. Stanton camped in the War office last night, and is still in possession.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Sherman's letter to the President, of the 18th January, is published.

Alluding to the contemplated efforts of himself and Grant to induce Stanton to resign, Sherman says if he will not, then it will be time to contrive ulterior measures.

Sherman deprecates precipitation.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—Senate.—Nothing of importance done.

House.—The session was cut up into speeches of from three to twenty minutes—crude emergency speeches, generally explaining predetermined votes.

The impeachment resolution passed by a strict party vote, except Stewart, of New York, and Carey, of Ohio, who voted with the Democrats. Committee to announce to the Senate the action of the House relative to impeachment—Stevens and Bingham. Committee to prepare articles of impeachment—Boutwell, Stevens, Bingham, Wilson, Logan, Julian and Ward. This committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Adjourned.

The most profound silence followed the enunciation of the vote on the impeachment resolution in the House to-day.

Stanton said to-day that he wished the reporters would let him alone.

The day closes with Stanton dining at the War Department with Chandler and others, the President at dinner, and Thomas at his home, and everything quiet.

The President is reported as saying that he recognized no one but Gen. Thomas as Secretary of War, and that he meant to recognize no one else. He concluded the interview by saying: "God and the American people will make all right and save our institutions."

The President appends to his message nominating Ewing Secretary of War, the assertion that he has not and does not intend to violate the tenure of office bill, or any other law, and argues elaborately his right even under that law to remove Stanton and appoint an ad interim Secretary.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—From a condition of extraordinary excitement and anxiety, this morning, there has been a gradual transition throughout the day, until to-night, when we find the public mind comparatively calm, notwithstanding the adoption of the impeachment resolution. The cause of the abatement of concern is attributable mainly to a better general understanding of the situation.

It is now apparent to those who feared the President would resort to military force to sustain him and execute his orders, that he has had no such purpose, and those who expected Congress to rush the impeachment project to a finality and dispose of the attempt to depose the President within ten days, as promised by some of the Radical members, now see clearly that the suggestions made by your correspondent last night are well founded, namely, that Judge Chase cannot be induced to join in an irregular or intemperate action in the Senate; that at least a portion of the Republican Senators will not consent to any improper or questionable procedure, nor hurrying up to a conviction without giving ample time for preparation, argument and deliberation commensurate with the gravity of the trial and the dignity of the office of President of the United States; in brief that the trial will proceed regularly, and that the decision of the Supreme Court will be first obtained before the Senate shall take a final vote upon the articles of impeachment. Those who look for the end of the impeachment movement short of three or four months will, beyond doubt, be disappointed.

The important occurrences to-day were but few. Gen. Thomas made another demand on Stanton for possession of the War Department, and was refused by the latter.

The President nominated Hon. Thos. Ewing, of Ohio, to be Secretary of War, and sent a message to the Senate in response to the resolution of that body of Friday night last, and setting forth the law by which his action in the Stanton matter is sustained.

The House impeached Mr. Johnson, and the latter had one of the most brilliant receptions of the season this evening at the White House, attended by Democratic Congressmen, foreign diplomatic corps, members of the Cabinet and other distinguished men, magnificently costumed ladies, and several Radical members who to-day voted to impeach the President. These comprise the events of to-day in a nutshell.

The vote on impeachment was quietly taken, and no demonstration followed the announcement of the result, though the immense audience present listened to the proceedings with intense interest.

The quo warranto mentioned last night, as contemplated by the President to-day, was not applied for by the Attorney General for reasons that will be made apparent shortly.

It is expected that the case against Gen. Thomas, to be tried by Judge Carter day after to-morrow, will be decided this week, and that the proceedings will be certified to the U. S. Supreme Court at an early day of next week. If that court shall give the case a position on its docket for an early hearing, a judgment may be had upon the constitutionality of the tenure of office act within a couple of months.

It is understood to-night that several Republican Senators have indicated that they prefer to hold back the impeachment trial until the Supreme Court shall have rendered its decision.

The President received to day and to-night numerous dispatches from Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York, Indiana, etc., etc., assuring him of the support of the people, pledging any required help in men and money to protect him from Radical usurpations and illegal and unconstitutional procedure. One dispatch from New York, representing a large body of men, winds up with this sentence: "We will take care of Genry's men."—N. O. Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Sumner read the Harvey dispatches and explained how they came confidentially into his possession.

At noon the clerk of the House appeared and announced the passage of the impeachment resolution. The Harvey dispatches were loosely discussed. Several partisan papers, sustaining impeachment, were sent to the clerk to be read. Hendricks objected, and on a vote being taken, the Senate refused to hear them.

A bill bridging the Mississippi at Madison county, Ill., introduced.

A number of the members of the House entered and took seats; afterward Stevens and Bingham, of the committee, entered. Stevens said: "Mr. President, in obedience to the order of the House of Representatives, we appear before you and in the name of the House of Representatives and of all the people of the United States, do impeach the President of the United States for high crimes and misdemeanors in office, and we further inform the Senate that the House of Representatives will, in due time, exhibit particular articles of impeachment against him, and make good the same, and in their name we demand that the Senate take order for the appearance of said Andrew Johnson to answer to said impeachment."

Wade said, "The Senate will take order in the premises." A special committee, consisting of Howard, Trumbull, Morton, Conkling, Edmunds, Pomeroy and Johnson were appointed to examine into impeachment and report proceedings.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—The committee appointed at a recent meeting in Baltimore to present certain resolutions relative to the rights of naturalized citizens abroad, this morning visited the executive mansion and presented the resolutions to the President. The chairman of the committee made an address—referring to the present condition of the country, he stated that the people trusted in him to stand firm and continue his efforts to uphold and defend the Constitution and laws.

The President, after expressing his hearty sympathy in the resolutions and the preamble thereto, promised to do all in his power to have the same observed. He spoke of the present difficulties as from the path of duty, and stated that he would do all in his power to maintain the supremacy of the law and defend the Constitution from all its enemies, no matter what the perils might be, or how great the sufferings he should endure in his efforts to accomplish the same.

WASHINGTON, February 26.—The unexpected termination of the criminal prosecution against Gen. Thomas, by the dismissal of the case and his discharge from custody, is the subject of comment to-night.

Judge Carter's apparent readiness to discharge the accused, so as to destroy the foundation for habeas corpus, is severely criticised by those who desire a decision of the legal points in the United States Supreme Court prior to a final vote in the Senate; whilst the action of the judge is approved and chuckled over as a shrewd manœuvre by those who favor the instant conviction of the President by a vote of the Senate, without reference to the action of the Supreme Court.

The following is a copy of Gen. Sherman's letter to the President, as often referred to within the past month in the newspapers:

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Jan. 18.—I neglected this morning to say that I had agreed to go down to Annapolis to spend Sunday with Admiral Porter. Gen. Grant also has to leave for Richmond on Monday morning at 6 o'clock. At a conversation with the General after our interview, wherein I offered to go with him on Monday morning to Mr. Stanton, and to say that it was our joint opinion he should resign, it was found impossible by reason of his going to Richmond and my going to Annapolis.

The General proposed this course. He will call on you to-morrow and offer to go to Mr. Stanton to say, for the good of the service and of the country, he ought to resign. On Sunday or Monday I will again call on you, and if you think it necessary I will call on Mr Stanton and tell him he should resign. If he will not, then it will be time to contrive ulterior means. In the meantime it so happens that no necessity exists for precipitating matters. Your's truly,

W. T. SHERMAN, Lieut. Gen.

Since the terrible earthquake at St. Thomas and other Gulf Islands it has been discovered that the Gulf stream has nearly doubled its velocity, and the phenomenon is now attracting very general attention among scientific men. It was first discovered in the increased difficulty of navigation near the Florida Keys, even steamers finding it difficult to weather points easily passed previously. The consequences to result from the change afford a fruitful field for scientific speculation, in which the interests of our own section of the country are vitally interested.

JAUNE MANGE.—To two ounces of isinglass add a pint of water, dissolve it over the fire, and add the rind of two large lemons grated. When it has boiled a little, put in a pint of white wine, then the yolks of eight eggs, thoroughly beaten, the juice of two lemons, and sugar to taste. The eggs, lemon juice and sugar should be previously mixed together with a small quantity of the wine. Add the whole together and keep stirring it one way until it boils. Then strain through muslin and pour into cups or molds that have been well rinsed in cold water.

THERE COMES A TIME.

There comes a time when we grow old,
And, like a sunset, down the sea
Slopes gradual, and the night wind cold
Comes whispering sad and chillingly;
And locks are grey
At winter's day,
And eyes of saddest hue behold
The leaves, all dreary, drift away,
And lips of fullest bold say—
There comes a time when we grow old.

There comes a time when joyous hearts,
Which leap as leaps the laughing main,
Are dead to all save memory,
A prisoner in his dungeon chain,
And dawn of day
Hath passed away;
The moon hath into darkness rolled,
And by the embers wan and grey
I hear a voice in whispers say—
There comes a time when we grow old.

There comes a time when manhood's prime
Is shrouded in the mist of years,
And beauty, fading like a dream,
Hath passed away in silent tears;
And then how dark!
But oh! the spark
That kindles youth to lines of gold
Still burns with clear and steady ray;
And fond affections, lingering, say—
There comes a time when we grow old.

There comes a time when laughing spring
And golden summer cease to be,
Again we put on the autumn robe
To tread the last decliviy;
But now the slope,
With rosy hope,
Beyond the sunset we behold
Another dawn with fairer light,
While watchers whisper through the night:
There comes a time when we grew old.

CHAT ABOUT CONFERENCE.

SITTING NO. III.

It almost always happens that the village or town where Conference is held is an important place. There is historic interest connected with it, or there is picturesque scenery surrounding it, or there are objects of virtu in the shape of monuments, colleges, asylums, etc., or there are "great expectations" entertained by the citizens of its future development and prosperity. So that every man who would cultivate properly an observant habit and withal render himself an agreeable guest in a village must consent to devote some attention to these associated material interests. By the by, when will preachers ever come to understand this duty, and prepare themselves accordingly? Oh! how they cripple along in tight boots or new shoes, as if they did not know that "the grand round" is one of the indispensable performances of every session, and that, whether a man is given to pedestrian exercises or not, he must walk once a year. Let no preacher go to Conference with shoes less than a month old. Verbum sat sapientibus." Opelika, at present, is small and comparatively uninteresting. There is much enterprise among its citizens, and they anticipate confidently that, as a railroad centre, there is much good fortune in store for them. For several years the West Point and Columbus roads have had their junction here, and the hotel has been, during these years, the largest establishment in the place—proving the importance of the traveling patronage. Since the new county of Lee was formed, however, and Opelika elected its shire-town, there has been evidently an advance every way.—There has been a valuable accession to the population. Many of the new-comers have been forced to build residences and offices. The public buildings which have been projected have brought labor into requisition. Two or three newspapers have sprung up to execute the indispensable advertisements, to tabulate the statistics of incomparable advantages concentrating at the incipient city, and to enlighten the good people generally. There was more sign of improvement at this place than anywhere we have been since the war closed. While we cannot enter fully into the "great expectations" of the place, we believe that it is destined to steady and substantial progress until it becomes one of the most interesting townsin East Alabama. We would do injustice to this place and to our Bro. Pitts were we to pass by his "institute for girls" as one of the permanent interests. His is an individual enterprise, conducted quietly, skillfully, successfully. Starting with the community, growing with its growth, training its outreaching progress, it will justly be esteemed the fountain-head of much that is good in that society. Already is the influence of this wise master-builder being felt by the Sabbath school and church. They are prosperous, united, growing. May our brother long live to teach and bless the rising generation. May his plastic hand be felt and owned in the intellectual and religious mould of every family in those parts.

Once in the Conference room, an observer must give earnest attention to the bishop, the cabinet and the committees if he would comprehend the full significance of an annual Conference. It is true there is a certain routine of business and some side issues of incidental interest, but these three are the magical, indispensable and fundamental elements of a Conference. What would a Conference be without a bishop, or a cabinet, or regular committees?

Bishop Wightman presided. We had never met him before, save at a "district meeting," and of course were more than usually curious and interested. On these occasions the "chair" always engrosses attention for the first hour. The manner in which the bishop reads, sings, prays, speaks and settles down to business is scrutinized with a particularity and closeness almost unparalleled in any parliamentary body. These matters, so small in themselves, often make the decisive impression. No man is so great that he can despise little things. While Bishop Wightman would meet the especial proprieties of any occasion, however, no just estimate could be made of him without going further and deeper into his history than the mere exercises and appearances of that occasion. We would have to refer to the civil and religious status of the "old Palmetto" State fifty years ago; we would have to recall the social culture and refinement that prevailed in the elegant cities of Charleston and Columbia at that time; we would have to take a boy from a home of wealth and piety, and, passing him through the halls of a State college, full of as knightly chivalry and as ardent patriotism as the noblest civilization ever produced, return him, "with his blushing honors thick upon him," to the fond endearments of home, with piety improved and duly tempered by the chivalrie association of college life. We would have to follow this shining youth from the threshold of offices, promising much of social distinction and civic honors, to the "cross of Christ," where, under one grand impulse of self-devotion and consecration, he laid himself once for all, never to be withdrawn. We would have to trace this young prophet through a career of increasing distinction and unswerving devotion to a church comparatively "little and unknown," sitting, meanwhile, at the feet of an Audrew, a Capers and an Olin. We would have to observe him as, on strong and well-fledged wing, he circled among the higher regions of scholarship and literature, serving successively as professor in Randolph Macon College, as editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, as president of Wofford, as chancellor of the Southern University, until the church, in 1866, merged one of its best professors into one of its best bishops. All this, I say, must be considered before we would know how to appreciate the fullness of his character—how to reconcile the gentleman and the Christian, the scholar and the preacher, the bishop and the servant. We praise our bishops, and we ought to do it. They are truly "primi in paribus." But when we come to legislate that every Conference must elect a bishop from its own members, then we will cease to praise them, for then they will not deserve it. They will be as common as dry leaves were in the "valley of Vallambrosa."

But Bishop Wightman "magnifies his office and makes it honorable." As a presiding officer he is self-possessed and confident, and wonderfully alive. He can make the best five-minute speeches I ever heard. Jupiter Tonans has any number of thunderbolts ranged beneath his Olympic throne. To illustrate: here is a quotation from notes taken when I first met him in a district meeting: "I was struck by the apropos utterances which issued from the 'chair' as the different interests of the church came into survey. The first was introductory, describing district meetings as a 'cross between the annual Conference and camp meeting. The business routine of the one and the spiritual power of the other meet in this new thing, styled 'district meeting.' Methodism is the right thing—the true representation of Christianity—the via media between formalism and ritualism on the one hand, and rationalism and mysticism on the other.' Then the bolt blazes, and while the scintillations of genius mingle with the coruscations of love, and flow and burn about, you despair of reproducing thunder and of painting lightning." As a preacher he is full and specific. I suppose that he could preach five hundred times to the same audience without being exhausted, and I have no idea that he ever will consent to preach with merely a general preparation of his subject, unless an insane clamor about a bishop's traveling should absolutely force him out of his study.

Withal, the bishop did not please us all in everything. He may have been right, but we doubt it. He hurried us—he 'put us through.' He did it very decently, but he did it very decidedly. He kept many of us from speaking, some of us from eating, and the secretary, at least, from sleeping—as much as was desirable. These three things most young men like. I am a young man, and there are a number of young men in the Montgomery Conference. A bishop may forget. He has had his day, and we want ours in our time. He goes to several conferences. We only attend one. Let him be patient and "wait a week." I have no doubt that much good speaking was suppressed by our bishop. I remember one instance. One of our best speakers was in one of his happiest moods. On he went, as only he can go. We were delighted. Suddenly he stopped. He had looked at the bishop, and, as if similarly affected with Isaac Stokes by a "hurting across his misery," he drew himself up spasmodically and sighed out: "Oh! I could make a speech, but I won't." I was personally interested in all this. Forsooth, when I should have been making my final Conference dinner, I was down at the journal, copying and turning, and turning and copying, and that, too, in close proximity to the dinner table, and in despite of a pressing entreaty "to come and dine." And sure enough the train came, and, missing dinner, by dint of hard running I did get on, thoroughly "blowed," with a mental tempest rising against the good bishop. "Ridentem dicere verum quid vetat?"

B. F. PERRY.

In the Church of England there are 1,500 clergymen whose income, as rectors or vicars, is under $750 per annum; there are some curates who starve on half that sum, and there is a society in London which gathers cast-off clothes for poor clergymen and their families. On the other side of the account, it appears that the primate of England has $75,000; the sees of York and London have each $50,000; Durham has a revenue of $40,000; Winchester, $35,000; Ely, $27,750, and of the remainder of the bishoprics nine have $25,000, seven have $22,500, and six have $21,000.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

NO. VI.—MIRACLES.

The antiquity, the uncorrupted preservation of the Scriptures, and the credibility of the sacred writers having been considered, we shall now proceed to consider if anything was said or done, recorded in these writings, which may prove them to have more than a human origin. If one comes to us claiming to act under inspiration, and to be a teacher sent from God, he must perform acts above human power, acts such as only God can perform, or those immediately empowered by Him. It was more than two thousand years after the creation, according to the received chronology, before any miracle was wrought through the agency of man—Moses being the first man that God accredited by working miracles through him. So that the laws of nature (or the laws by which God governs nature) had long been observed and were well known, and the first miracles were wrought among the most civilized and observant people then in the world—the Egyptians.

Is it asked, what is a miracle? A miracle has been defined to be "an effect or event different from the established constitution or course of things, or a sensible suspension or controlment of or deviation from the known laws of nature, wrought either by the immediate act, or by the assistance or by the permission of God, for the proof or evidence of some particular doctrine, or in attestation of the authority of some particular person." The possibility of miracles, being wrought by the power of God can be denied by none but atheists, or those whose theories are substantially atheistic. A miracle is not, as some have supposed, a contradiction of nature. It is only an unusual and extraordinary way of doing that which God is continually doing in what we call an ordinary way. For example, God causes countless fountains to burst from rocks and flow in copious streams; but the causing of the fountain to burst from the rock, when smitten by the rod of Moses, was unusual and extraordinary. God causes rain to fall somewhere on the earth every day; but to cause the rain to fall at "wheat harvest," a season of uniform dryness, as recorded in 1st Samuel, 12: 17, was an extraordinary departure from a uniform law. To turn water into wine, through the instrumentality of the vine and various chemical agents, is that which God has been doing in all ages upon the hills of Judea, France, Spain and Italy; but to turn water suddenly into wine, without the employment of any second causes, was a miracle. And so of healing the sick and calming storms, and all miracles.

For the information of those who have not access to books, we will give the objection of Voltaire—one of the most eminent of deistical writers—and then an answer to it. Voltaire says: "It is impossible that a Being, infinitely wise, should make laws to violate them. He would not derange the machine of his own construction, unless it were for its improvement. But as a God he hath, without doubt, made it perfect as possible; or, if he had foreseen any imperfection likely to result from it, he would surely have provided for it from the beginning, and not be under a necessity of changing it afterward. He is unchangeable and omnipotent, and therefore can neither have any desire to alter the course of nature, or have any need to do so." Dr. Van Mildert replies: "This argument is grounded on a misconception or misrepresentation of the design of miracles, which is not to remedy any physical defect, not to rectify any original or accidental imperfections in the laws of nature, but to manifest to the world the interposition of the Almighty, for especial purposes of a moral kind. It is simply to make known to mankind that it is He who addresses them, and that whatever is accompanied with this species of evidence comes from Him, and claims their implicit belief and obedience. The perfection, therefore, or the imperfection, of the laws of nature has nothing to do with the question. All nature is subservient to the will of God, and as his existence and attributes are manifested in the ordinary course of nature, so, in the extraordinary work of miracles his will is manifested by the display of his absolute sovereignty over the course of nature. Thus, in both instances, the Creator is glorified in his works, and it is made to appear that 'by Him all things consist,' and that for His pleasure they are and were created. This seems a sufficient answer to any argument a priori against miracles, from their supposed inconsistency with the divine perfections."

While noticing objections to miracles it may be worth while to notice Mr. Hume's argument against them, as it has made some noise in its day and may still possibly lead some astray. Hume says: "Our belief in miracles can only rest upon the credibility of human testimony." He argues that "we should not receive the deposition of men who testify that miracles have been wrought, because it is contrary to experience that miracles should be true, but not contrary to experience that testimony may be false, and that it is more reasonable to doubt testimony than to believe in miracles."

Let us analyze and answer this. What is experience? It is that which we have realized or observed. Then to say that miracles are contrary to experience is to beg the question, and assert what remains to be proved, for there are most reliable persons who assert that miracles have been performed. Mr. Hume can only mean that he had never witnessed a miracle, nor had any one with whom he was acquainted. It devolves on Mr. Hume, or those who accept his argument, to prove that miracles are contrary to the experience of all men.

Again: a miracle is not contrary to our experience, for we have no experience on the subject. Anything to be contrary to our experience must be contrary to that which we have realized or observed. For example, if it should be said that on the first day of January, 1863, while the governor of the State was in the State house, making a public address, the hair of his head turned suddenly white: if we were present at the time, and saw no such phenomenon, that would be contrary to our experience; but if we were not present, such an affirmation would not be contrary to our experience, for the simple reason that we have no experience on the subject.

Again: we are not to believe the testimony of witnesses unless they testify to something that we know to be true, or something analogous to our experience. Then we would not believe the narrations of a traveler who should affirm that in certain regions visited by him there was no winter, but perpetual spring and summer, or that in another region there were three months in each year when the sun was entirely hidden from the earth, because such phenomena are more than we have observed in the region where we have lived.

Again: we should have to doubt the testimony of our own senses if we reasoned upon Mr. Hume's hypothesis. To illustrate: suppose in my travels I should come across a spring of hot water. This, as Mr. Hume puts it, would be "contrary to my experience," and therefore I should be constrained to doubt it—and suppose that my sensation played me false, and that the water of the spring must be cool. Such are some of the fallacies of this so-called argument against the credibility of those who have testified to miracles. We must continue the subject of miracles in our next number.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mr. EDITOR: The semi-annual examination of the Mansfield Female College commenced on the 4th day of February, and continued four days, closing on Friday night with a concert of vocal and instrumental music. We were present during the examination of sixteen classes, and our verdict upon these exercises is that the examination by the faculty was thorough and severe. The young ladies, many of them, showed that they had been strictly economical in the use of their time during the past session. Bishop Marvin, on attending a like examination here, said: "It is a severe ordeal to subject our daughters to, but it is right." The college is respectably represented by the daughters of itinerant ministers. The next five months' session commenced on the 10th of February, and as the college has a full, well-tried corps of teachers, we bespeak for them a liberal patronage. So far it has been good, considering the times.

THE BLESSED BIBLE.

In Scotland, during the time of bloody persecution, when Claverhouse was marching about the country, driving people from their homes, burning their houses, and putting many godly people to death, a pious father told his family that there were soldiers near, and they must hasten to the next village, where there was a strong old church the fugitives could use as a fort. So he told Jeanie to take the big Bible for her load, and that she must be very careful not to let it get wet, or lose it by the way. "For we could not live," said he, "without the good book." So she wrapped a gown around the Bible, and started with her father and mother, each of whom carried a child.

They had to cross a brook, but they did not dare to go by the bridge, lest they should be captured by the enemy. There was a place where they thought they could cross on some stepping stones, but on reaching the place it had become quite dark. So Jeanie's father waded across, and carried the others one by one, until she was left quite alone. Jeanie was much afraid to be left there by herself, so she started to cross after her father, stepping carefully from stone to stone. But presently her foot slipped, and down she went to the bottom. At the same time up went her arms, holding the precious burden over her head. The water came up to her waist, but bracing herself firmly against the rapid current, she walked bravely on across the stream, and had nearly reached the shore with the dear old book lifted as high as she could raise it, when she met her father returning to bring her.

"Father," she cried, "you told me to take care of the dear old Bible, and I have done so."

Just as she said this they heard several pistol shots and the sound of approaching horsemen. They soon hid themselves in a little cleft of the rocks, and were not discovered.

Jeanie married in after years, and now has great-great-grandchildren living in this country. The old Bible became her's after her father's death, and in it were written the names of her seven children. It is still in very good condition, in the possession of her descendants.

Jeanie never forgot that dreadful night when she carried the old Bible through the deep waters, and when she was dying she seemed to be dreaming of it, and said: "I am in the deep river—in the deep river—but I'll hold up the dear old Bible. There, take the book! take the book!" and soon she ceased to breathe.

That brave girl wading through the waters and holding up the Bible is like the Christian church marching through rivers of persecution and streams of blood, ever holding up the word of God, that it may be safely kept and handed down to the generations following.—Sunday School Visitor.

HOW OLD ART THOU?

"How old art thou?"—Man measureth time
By things that fall away and flit;
By sickled fields of autumn prime,
Summer's last bloom or winter's sky.

Age from its sparkle gliding takes,
The cheek forgets its roseate glow,
The form its grace, the hair its hue;
The brow its beauty—let them go.

But the true heart can ne'er grow old;
Its eyes are bright when youth has fled;
Its ear is never dull to sound;
Its lips can speak, though speech be dead.

By prayer, by alms, by written page,
By planting words of holy trust,
It quickeneth love from age to age,
It liveth when the frame is dust.

So count thou not thy age by tears,
Or smiles of fortune's fickle ray,
Nor say how old thou art in years
Of waste, and folly, and decay.

But ever with a steadfast eye
On Him from whom thy life proceeds,
Notch thou its seasons on thy soul,
And tell its calendar by deeds.

COLORED SUNS.

BY RICHARD A. PROCTOR, B. A., F. R. A. S.

If a brilliant star be observed when near the horizon, it will be seen to present the beautiful phenomenon of "colored scintillation." The colors thus exhibited exceed in purity even those seen in the solar spectrum or in the rainbow. By comparison with them the light which flashes from the ruby, the emerald, the sapphire, or the topaz, appears dull and almost earthy. There are four or five stars which present this phenomenon with charming distinctness. The brilliant Vega in the constellation Lyra, which rarely sets in our latitude, is one of these. At midnight in winter, and earlier with the approach of spring, this splendid steel-blue star may be seen as it skirts the southern horizon, scintillating with red, and blue, and emerald light. Arcturus twinkles yet more brilliantly low down toward the northeast in our spring evenings. Capella is another notable scintillator, seen low down toward the north during the summer nights. But these, though they are the most brilliant northern stars, yet shine with a splendor far inferior to that of Sirius, the famous dog-star. No one can mistake this noble orb as it rises above the southern horizon in our winter months. The vivid colors exhibited by Sirius, as it scintillates, have afforded a favorite image to the poets. Homer compares the celestial light which gleamed from the shield and helmet of Diomed to the rays of "Sirius, the star of autumn," which "shines with a peculiar brilliancy when laved by ocean's waves;" and, to pass at once from the father of poetry to our greatest modern poet, we find in Tennyson's "Princess" the same image, where he says of Arac and his brothers that—

"As the fiery Sirius alters hue,
And bickers into red and emerald, shone
Their morions, washed with morning, as they came."

But the stars which present distinctly marked colors to the naked eye in our latitudes are few and far between. It is in the telescope that our observers have to seek for a full view of the delicate phenomenon of colored stars. When a survey is made of the heavens with a powerful telescope, peculiarities well worthy of careful attention are revealed to the observer. We have seen that there are no stars visible to the naked eye which are decidedly blue or green. The ancients, also, recognized only red and white stars. In the telescope, this peculiarity is still observable when single stars only are looked at. We meet with some telescopic stars the depth of whose red color is remarkable. There are stars of a fiery red, of a deep blood-red, and of a full orange color. There is a well-known star entitled the "garnet star." And, in fact, every variety of color, from white through yellow and orange to a deep almost dusky red, is met with among the single fixed stars. But there is no instance throughout the whole heavens of a single green, blue or violet star.

The case is altered when we come to examine those double, triple, and multiple stars, the observation of which is one of the most pleasing employments of the amateur telescopist.

Amongst these systems we meet with all the tints of the rainbow, and with many colors which are not seen in the rainbow, such as fawn-color, lilac, gray, and so on. "The attentive observation of the double stars," writes the celebrated Struve, (who detected 3,000 of these objects,) "teaches us that—besides those that are white, all the colors of the spectrum are to be met with." "Here we have a green star with a deep blood-red companion, there an orange primary accompanied by a purple or indigo-blue satellite. White is found mixed with light or dark red, purple, ruby or vermilion." Sometimes a single system offers at one view many different colors. Such is the case with the remarkable group detected by Sir John Herschel within the Southern Cross. It is composed of no less than 110 stars, which, seen in a telescope of sufficient size, appear, Herschell tells us, "a casket of variously colored precious stones."

It will be well to examine some of the collections of color, that we may trace the presence of a law of distribution, if such exist.

We have said that blue stars are not met with singly in the heavens. Among double stars they are common enough. But they are generally small. When the larger star or primary is not white it is usually either red or yellow; then the smaller star—or satellite, as we may term it—is frequently blue or green. But this is so far from being a law without exception that the more common case is to find both stars similarly tinted. Amongst 596 bright "doubles," Struve found 375 whose components were similarly colored, 101 whose components presented colors belonging to the same end of the spectrum, and only 120 in which the colors were totally different.

Amongst double stars whose components are similarly tinted, by far the greater number are white, yellow or red; and there is in the southern heavens a group containing a multitude of stars, all blue.

One of the most startling facts revealed by the careful observation of the fixed stars is that their color is not unchangeable.

We may begin at once with the brightest of the fixed stars—Sirius. This star was known to the ancients as a red star. To its fiery hue may doubtless be ascribed the peculiar influence assigned to it by ancient astronomers. At present Sirius is brilliantly and unmistakably white.

We have not such decisive evidence in the case of any other noted star. But among telescopic stars there have been some very remarkable changes. There are two double stars, described by the elder Herschel as white, which now exhibit golden-yellow primaries and greenish satellites. That careful observer, Admiral Smyth, records also that one of the components of a double star in Hercules changed, in twelve years, "from yellow, through gray, cherry red, and egregious red, to yellow again."

The questions may well be asked, whence do the stars derive their distinctions of color? and by what process do their colors change? To these questions modern discoveries have supplied answers which, if not complete, are well worth listening to.

It had long been suspected that the stars are in reality suns. It had been shown that their distance from us must be so enormous as to enable us to assign to them an intrinsic brilliancy fully equal in some instances, and in others far superior, to that of our own sun. Nothing remained but that we should have some evidence that the kind of light they emit is similar to that which we received from the sun. This evidence has been supplied, though only of late years.

We cannot here enter at length into an account of the important discoveries of Kirchhoff and Bunsen which have enabled astronomers to analyze the light emitted from the celestial bodies. It will be sufficient to remark that in the solar spectrum there are observed fine dark lines breaking the continuity of the streak of light, and that these lines have been proved to be due to the presence of the vapors of certain elements in the solar atmosphere. The proof depends on the exact correspondence of numbers of these lines, grouped in a complex manner (aims entirely to eliminate the possibility of a mere chance accordance) with the bright lines seen in the spectra of light from the vapors of those elements. When once Kirchhoff and Bunsen had proved the possibility of exhibiting the same set of lines either as bright lines on a dark ground, or as dark lines on a brilliant spectrum, all doubt as to their meaning in the solar spectrum disappeared at once.

It has been found that in the sun's atmosphere there are present the vapors of iron, copper, zinc and nickel, besides calcium, magnesium, sodium, and other metals. But the vapors of tin, lead, silver and gold do not appear to be present in the solar atmosphere. One of the most remarkable dark lines is due to the presence of hydrogen.

But it has been found possible to extend these researches to the fixed stars. Mr. Huggins and Dr. Miller have done this successfully, and their discoveries afford a means of assigning very sufficient reasons for the colors of the brighter stars. By analogy also we may extend a similar interpretation to the colors of stars not bright enough to give a spectrum which can be satisfactorily examined.

Let us take the brilliant Sirius. This star belongs to the southern half of the celestial sphere, and although it becomes visible at certain seasons in our latitude, it never rises very high above the horizon. In fact, at its highest—that is, when due south—it is only twenty-two degrees above the horizon, or less than one-fourth of the way from the horizon to the point immediately overhead. This peculiarity somewhat interferes with the observation of the star by a method so delicate as that applied by the celebrated physicists we have named. On the other hand the exceeding brilliancy of Sirius makes some amends for the effects of atmospheric disturbances. By selecting very favorable opportunities, Huggins and Miller were able to analyze the star's spectrum, with the following result:

"The atmosphere around Sirius contains sodium, magnesium, hydrogen, and probably iron."

"The whole spectrum is covered by a very large number of faint and fine lines, indicating a corresponding variety in the substances vaporized in the star's atmosphere."

"The hydrogen lines are abnormally strong as compared with the solar spectrum, all the metallic lines being remarkably faint."

This last circumstance is well worthy of notice, since it is a peculiarity characteristic of white stars—so that we begin already to find a hint respecting the source of color or of the absence of color in stars.

Take next an orange-red star, the brilliant Betelgeux. The spectrum of this star was very carefully analyzed by Messrs. Huggins and Miller. They marked down the places of two or three hundred lines, and measured the position of no less than eighty. They found that sodium, magnesium, calcium, iron and bismuth are present in the star's atmosphere; but the two strong lines which note the presence of hydrogen are wanting.

Take next the yellow star, Pollux. The observers were not able to obtain very satisfactory measures of this star; but they established the presence of sodium and magnesium in the star's atmosphere; and again the strong lines of hydrogen were found to be missing.

But we are not entitled to assume that red and yellow stars are characterized by the absence of hydrogen from their atmospheres. On the contrary, the noted red star Aldebaran, the spectrum of which was very carefully analyzed by Huggins and Miller, was found to exhibit the two lines of hydrogen with perfect distinctness. This star exhibited a richness in the construction of its atmosphere not presented by any other. The elements proved to be present are sodium, magnesium, calcium, iron, bismuth, tellurium, antimony and mercury. It must not be supposed, in this or any other case, that other elements might not by a sufficiently laborious scrutiny be proved to exist in the star's atmosphere. The observations required, says Mr. Huggins, "are extremely fatiguing to the eye, and necessarily limited to the stronger lines of each spectrum."

It is clear, however, from the above short list of examples, that a considerable variety exists in the physical constitution of the fixed stars. This of itself affords a suggestive hint respecting the true explanation of the variety of color which we have described. And the peculiarity that in the white stars the hydrogen lines are singularly strong, while the metallic lines are as singularly weak, is yet more to the point. Sirius was a red star. Was it at that time unlike present red stars? Does it not seem more probable that, if there had existed in those days a Huggins or a Miller, and the instruments used so successfully by these observers had been invented, it would have been found that Sirius did not—when a red star—present peculiarities now observed only in white stars?

VICTORIA AND HER DAUGHTER.—An anecdote illustrating Victoria's admirable good sense and strict domestic discipline came to us directly from one who witnessed the occurrence. One day, when the Queen was present in her carriage at the military review, the princess royal, then rather a willful girl of about thirteen, sitting on the front seat, seemed to be rather familiar and coquettish with some of the young officers of the escort. Her majesty gave several reproving looks, without avail—"winked at her, but she wouldn't stay winked." At length, in flirting her handkerchief over the side of the carriage, she dropped it—too evidently not accidentally. Instantly two or three young heroes sprang from their saddles to return it to her fair hand, but the awful voice of royalty stayed them. "Stop, gentlemen," exclaimed the Queen, "leave it just where it lies. Now, my daughter, get down from the carriage and pick up your handkerchief." The royal footman let down the steps for the royal lady, who proceeded to lift from the dust the pretty piece of cambric and lace. She blushed a good deal, though she tossed her head saucily, and she was doubtless angry enough, but the mortifying lesson may have nipped in the bud her first impulse toward coquetry. It was hard, but wholesome. How many American mothers would be equal to such a piece of Spartan discipline?

THE PALESTINE EXPLORATIONS.

FURTHER INTERESTING RESEARCHES.—THE LATEST DISCOVERIES.—THE ANCIENT CITY ALMOST REVEALED TO VIEW.

SIR: Since my last communication (in the Times of Dec. 21) I have received two reports from Lieutenant Warren, R. E., dated at Jerusalem, the 12th and 21st of December. He is prosecuting vigorously with his searches. They divide themselves under three main heads:

1. The ancient double passage or tunnel running from the so-called "Huldah gate," in the south wall of the Haram, below the mosque of the Aksa, up to the platform itself of the Haram. It has always been an object of anxiety to know whether this was a mere tunnel, or whether it had subsidiary passages branching from it either west or east. Mr. Warren seems to have shown that none such exist. At the northern end of the tunnel he has discovered on the east a vaulted chamber 17 feet square, and on the west some unimportant waterducts, five feet below the present surface, and probably connected with a tank beneath. These ducts he believes to be older than the Aksa mosque. The square chamber I understand him to say is later than the mosque. The sides of the tunnel at its lower end are about 16 feet of solid masonry, very rough on its outer face.

2. In the Tyropœon Valley, west of the southwest corner of the Haram. Here galleries are being driven to discover the depth and position of the native rock of the ravine immediately below the wall, and the position of the pier which supported the western side of "Robinson's arch." The pier seems to have been reached; two courses of stone were in situ, and I hope shortly to receive details of its construction, and of the rock of the gulley between it and the wall. Mr. Warren sees ground for believing that this gulley will be found to sweep round eastward and descend to the "Virgin's Fount," and thus divide Moriah from Ophel—a fact before suspected.

3. The water supply of the ancient city. In this an advance has been made. Researches at great depth in the upper part of the Tyropœon seem to point to the actual existence of the brook which in the days of monarchy "overflowed through the midst of the land," and which Hezekiah stopped or concealed when the city was besieged by Sennacherib (2 Chronicles xxxii, 4.) This stream would appear to be still forcing its ancient way along its old channel, at the prodigious depth of more than sixty feet beneath the present surface. A mile west of the city, beneath it and the ancient village of Nephtoah, Mr. Warren has explored, at some personal risk, a remarkable cleft which descends into the earth to a depth of more than one hundred and fifty feet, and which may not improbably be one of the sources of the water supply of Jerusalem. On the other hand, in the valley of the Kedron, a mile and a half south of the city and 500 yards below the "Well of Joab," a well has been excavated, apparently for the first time, which proves to contain passages, staircases and other contrivances, which it can hardly be too much to assume will be found to be connected with the waters of the city itself. Fragmentary as are all these discoveries, they indicate an amount of ancient remains below the surface which cannot but excite the hopes and stimulate the curiosity of all concerned, and incite us to strain every nerve to lay bare such interesting relics.

As I read Mr. Warren's accounts I seem to feel the ancient city with in my grasp—to know for a certainty that its very houses and streets and watercourses, all the ancient life of its structures, its hills and its ravines, is lying buried like some enchanted person beneath that singular and solemn tomb. The cliff (as the Dean of Westminster said in his sermon the other day) which Joab climbed, the streets which David trod, and along which Athaliah was hurried, the catacomb of the kings of Judah, the very Via Dolorosa itself, of which not even the shadow of a likeness can be found in the upper air of a modern city—all these are doubtless there.

Wherever Mr. Warren probes, let him but go deep enough, and he comes on some solid substance of curious and ancient kind. They start into view in a truly magical manner, more like the Arabian Night's than anything else. A "stone suddenly rolls away" and reveals staircases, passages, subterraneau halls in the heart of the rock leading to who knows what repositories of treasure. An almost invisible crevice in the hill turns out to be an enchanted cave one hundred and fifty feet deep, concealing the "skeleton of an infant," and containing, perhaps, the hidden fountain of the water supply of Jerusalem. The work has been fairly and well began. An explorer more daring and disinterested, more indefatigable and intelligent than Mr. Warren seems impossible. Let us back him to the utmost. I am happy to say that the undertaking is relieved from present pecuniary anxieties. But that is no reason for stopping our contribution to work the extent and importance of which are daily becoming more obvious. The explorations at Jerusalem may be—will be when the line weather returns—pushed on simultaneously in more places at once, and a larger force of laborers employed. Mr. Warren seems to have gained the confidence of every one, high and low, Jew and Gentile, and to obtain what laborers he likes, and what permissions he desires. And outside of Jerusalem I hope the public will not forget how much there is to do. There is the natural history of the country to collect, and geology to examine, the ethnology to discover. The explorers are waiting for the signal to be off. Without diverting a sovereign from those urgent calls nearer home which this inclement season brings so closely before us—without diverting a sovereign from these—there is ample money to be obtained for the grand and interesting object for which I plead.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

THE LAST SUTTEE.—The late Maharajah of Oodeypore, the head of all the rajahs and the representative of the oldest royal family in the world, died in 1861. Each of his numerous wives was asked to save the honor of the Sesodia clan, the head of which never burned alone, but all refused. His favorite slave-girl was then appealed to by her own brother, who pointed to the fact that his master's lawful queens had shamelessly given her an honor, and the opportunity of attaining a renown in the songs of the bats, it were madness to neglect. She consented, and this was the scene: The royal corpse, dressed up in regal attire, was conveyed from the palace to the burning-place in a species of sedan chair; the funeral procession, composed of all the loyal subjects of the State, one and all, high and low, rich and poor, even the successor to the throne, proceeded the whole distance on foot; one alone in this vast multitude was allowed to ride, and she had but a short time to live. Mounted on a gorgeously caparisoned horse, herself richly attired as for a festive occasion, literally covered with jewels and costly ornaments, her hair loose and in disorder, her whole countenance wild with the excitement of the scene and the intoxicating effects of the drugs she had swallowed—she issued forth with the body. As customary on such occasions, the victim, as the procession moved on, unclasped the ornaments with which she was profusely decorated, and flung them to the right and to the left amongst the crowd. On reaching the place of suttee, in the space closed by tent walls, the corpse was unrobed, and the slave-girl, seating herself with the head of the lifeless body in her lap, was built up, as it were, with wood steeped in oil. The "kanats" or canvas walls were then removed, and the pyre lighted; and, as the flame shot up bright and fierce, the crowd around raised a great clamor, which lasted until the dreadful scene was over. It is satisfactory to learn that this poor slave-girl was the last public suttee. Since that time the Maharao of Kotah has died, and the only one of his wives who was anxious to be consumed with him was prevented by his son, the present chief.—London Freeman.

TO MAKE MARMALADE.—Take Seville oranges; peel them by cutting round, and inserting a spoon round, so as to divide each rind in two. Then cut the oranges in halves, beginning at the stem end. Take out the pulp and the juice, and put them by in a basin. The skins and seeds put into another basin, and pour boiling water over them, and leave them till next day, when you pass them through a sieve, and add to them the juice and pulp. The rinds of the oranges must be boiled eight hours in plenty of water, changing the water four times every two hours, to prevent their being too bitter. When quite tender, put them to drain, and the next day cut them into slices as thin as paper; then mix with the liquid. Add an equal weight of sugar, and boil gently a full hour and a quarter.

BREAD AND BUTTER PUDDING.—Cut five slices of bread across the loaf, very thin; spread them thick with butter; cut the slices in two or four parts; butter a dish and lay them in, with a spoonful of dried currants between each slice. Lay them so that the top will be even and not quite as high as the dish. Pour over them a quart of custard, made with boiled milk and five or six eggs, and flavored with peach and nutmeg. It will bake in less than an hour if the milk is boiled, and is best if not baked very long. Some people prefer to toast the bread.

Protestant Children in Romanist Schools.

Protestant children in Romanist schools is a growing evil. We have been told that sixty daughters of Methodists in Mississippi are now attending the Romanist female school at Bardstown, Ky. This is a shame and a sin. As in point, we extract from the Religious Herald a notice and summary of an opportune little book, entitled "Children of Baptists in Catholic schools," by the Rev. Thomas H. Storts, of Bowling Green, Ky. It seems that Baptists, as well as Methodists, and all Protestants in fact, have cause for instruction and warning on this subject. We copy as follows:

The author shows the danger and sin of sending our children to Catholic schools in the form of objections—and these objections, to my mind, are weighty. Let us run over them very briefly, so that those who have not enjoyed the privilege of seeing the book itself may obtain an idea of its contents. The first objection is—Young ladies and even little girls are taken away from gospel influences. They never hear a sermon. Within the cloister there is no family altar, no Sabbath school, no example or counsel of the man of God; but instead, they are placed under the religious training of men and women, whose hearts are strangers to Divine grace.

The second objection is—"Tradition is made superior to the Word of God." "In this institution the Holy Bible is not used as the Divine authority in religion." The Bible is subordinate to the authority of the Catholic church, and that "old hoary-headed liar, Tradition," handed down, through the Catholic church, reeking with the blood of saints, is placed on a "level" with God's holy inspired Word.

The third objection is—Fundamental errors are taught the pupils, "God-insulting, soul-destroying" errors. Idolatry, as rank as ever flourished on pagan soil, is taught and practiced; such as the worship of the Virgin Mary, the sacred mass, etc., etc., baptismal regeneration, the cleansing from original sin—which is horrid blasphemy; transubstantiation, the true body and blood of Jesus Christ under the appearance of bread and wine. The sacrament of penance does away with gospel repentance. This robs Jesus of his prerogative to forgive sins, and gives this power to a graceless priest.

The fourth objection is—Catholics are bloody persecutors. "Since the birth of popery (606) to the present time, fifty millions of the human family have been slaughtered, for the crime of heresy, by popish persecutors; an average of more than 40,000 religious murders for every year of the existence of popery."—(Dowling's History of Romanism, page 542.) "Enough of blood shed by Catholics to float all the nunneries in the State of Kentucky."

The fifth objection is—"Catholics are persecutors in principle." Their highest standard authority in moral philosophy teaches that all "heretics are justly punishable with death." Every bishop and priest is solemnly sworn to persecute all heretics. There is not a bishop, or priest, or sister, in this State who would not put every Baptist to death if it were in his or her power. They believe it is a solemn, holy duty to exterminate all who do not bow the neck in servile submission, entire and unquestioning, to the will of the "Great Whore, the mother of harlots, drunken with the blood of saints and the martyrs of Jesus." And yet, mirabile dictu! Baptists patronize these dens of infamy, established mainly to propagate the monstrous principles of Roman Catholicism.

Our author notices and refutes the plea that Catholic schools are cheaper and better than ours, and closes with an earnest and solemn exhortation to Christian parents to regard themselves as stewards of God, and responsible for the proper moral and mental training of their daughters.

The branch of our Publishing House in this city is now domiciled in a fine new store, at 112 Camp street. It is well fitted up and affords room for displaying the stock of books on hand to advantage. The Rev. R. J. Harp, the agent, has shown much enterprise and taste in the whole arrangement. It is a credit to Methodism, and we doubt not will prove a power for good in the Southwest. Our friends, in coming to the city, will find it a convenient place for meeting each other, seeing the preachers, and for making purchases of stationery, Sunday school books, and all the publications of our Nashville Publishing House. We call special attention to the books announced by the agent, from time to time, in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. He has quite a number of miscellaneous works, and is prepared to obtain any book which may be ordered by his customers, upon short notice and at reasonable rates. The Sunday School Visitor and the Ladies' Home Monthly are in part issued from this city, and can be obtained directly from the agent at this branch. We beg to refer the reader to a catalogue of books which is published, and for sale at the same rates here as at Nashville.

GOOD NEWS.

NEW ORLEANS, February 24, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I rejoice in stating that my charge has been blessed with quite a glorious revival during a protracted meeting of two weeks' duration. The "still small voice" made itself heard in many hearts, strengthening established Christians, and convicting and converting sinners. Eight conversions and five accessions to the church are, so far as we can judge, the trophies of our endeavors. Brother Pauly—the beloved patriarch of German Methodism—and also Brother Maas, rendered me most valuable assistance. Respectfully,

J. B. A. AHRENS.

HIGH-CHURCH ASSUMPTIONS.

The extravagant conceit of the least of all churches in claiming to be the only bulwark of the faith, and in wishing to put thirty-one millions of people upon the short allowance, the mere crumbs, which its feeble company of ministers can supply of the word of life, is like that of the bramble that invited the forests of Lebanon to put their trust in his shadow. Nor does there seem to be any remedy for this unfortunate hallucination. As very small people hold themselves very straight, so the assumption of this branch of Protestantism increases with its comparative feebleness. One would suppose the reflection that it was here full one hundred years in advance of the Methodists, that it has had on its church record the name of Gen. Washington, and a considerable part of the annual yield of West Point and the United States Navy; but that with all these advantages, and the "only divinely appointed ministry" besides, it now contains scarcely one twentieth of the Protestants in the land, would in some degree modify, abate, and repress its self-satisfied sufficiency. Not at all; as it is the least of all seeds in its actual strength, so is it the greatest among herbs in its assumptions. We do not say that growth is the only mark of an evangelical church, for evil things, and false things, and heresies, like hurtful weeds and poisonous plants, grow with amazing vigor; but we do say that growth is one of the qualities essential to virtue, or else how shall evil ever be overcome. Nor do we say that this church is devoid of all power or that it has not in it some life. Far from it. Those twenty-eight bishops who protested of late against the Romanising forms and theories which are rife in the church of England, and are in the ascendant in many dioceses in this country, are doubtless true men. So too the body of Episcopalians who have been trained by the late venerable bishop of Virginia stand forth as a noble part of the true Protestant church, and they are doing battle for truth, and preparing for that agonizing conflict which already rages up to their very persons in their own communion. But we do say that a church that can show so few extraordinary evidences of divine favor, and has had so limited a success in bringing souls to Christ, can well afford to let another praise her, and can be better employed than in trying to engross the admiration and respect of men by assuming to be the only church of Christ. Dr. Dix, of Trinity church, says in his "Manual," just published, all non-Episcopal Christians, so-called, "do not comprehend the full mystery of the Holy Trinity, the Incarnation, and the office of the Holy Ghost; nor do they believe in the Catholic church, or the virtue of the sacraments; and so they come short of entire and complete faith."

Some good people are in great doubt, and think that such claims are too extravagant to be serious. One would think so, but at this moment one of their ablest divines, Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, jr., is upon trial in New York for having preached in the St. James Methodist church, in New Brunswick, New Jersey, thereby indorsing that "society" as a church; whereas the Lord says, "come out from among them and be ye separate." Too good to preach in other pulpits, and nobody good enough to preach in their's but themselves. There's charity for you. "We forbade him!" "Forbid him not," answered the Saviour, "for he that is not against us is for us." The disposition to monopolize every gift of God is a trait of human nature which was as offensive to Moses as it is to Christ. "And there ran a young man and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp. And Joshua said, my Lord Moses, forbid them. And Moses said, Enviest thou for my sake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his spirit upon them!"

One wishes to know upon what this claim to superiority rests: why is a Methodist or Baptist or a Presbyterian unfit to preach, who in five minutes after he joins the Episcopal church becomes a fit and powerful minister of the gospel. What has been done to him? "The bishop has laid his hands upon him." So, so! There, then, is the distinctive difference: it is to be found in the fingers of the bishop; as if the Holy Ghost went by his act and waited upon his manipulation. One again asks, whence all this? The answer is, "it is by divine right, by uninterrupted succession from the apostles." This is the gist of the whole matter, the sum of this great assumption of church superiority: that BISHOPS are superior to elders as an order, and that the Protestant Episcopal church has this only genuine article of bishop. These are stout words and need a strong backing. Nothing short of Scripture will do in making good a claim which binds the whole world in absolute spiritual dependence upon a single order of men. No other Protestant church admits the existence of any order of ministers superior to ELDERS. But affirm that in the Scriptures elder and bishop are no two things, but BOTH ONE, and that whatever the bishop is, he is by virtue of his being an elder. A divine right can only be proved by divine authority; we therefore advise our people, when ever annoyed by these "divine-right" gentlemen, to ask them: 1. For one single passage of Scripture which expressly says that a "bishop" ever ordained any one? The word "bishop" occurs only in five places in the New Testament, and it can be easily cited if there "Elders" only are expressly said to ordain. Ask, 2. For one passage in which an apostle calls himself a "bishop?" The apostles sometimes call themselves "elders," but never "bishops." Ask, 3. If "bishops" are anywhere mentioned as joining the apostles in a church council? Because "elders" are. Ask, 4. If there is one instance in which it is expressly said that the apostles placed a "bishop" in charge of a diocese? Because "elders" are expressly mentioned as having the government and oversight of the churches planted by the apostles. Ask, 5. If there is any order mentioned as having oversight of ministers, in the whole New Testament? Because the word "bishop" is used only to express oversight of "the flock," not of the ministry.

So that this vaunted right to lay on hands in ordination which these high-church bishops claim, by virtue of being of an order superior to that of elders, is gratuitous, vainly assumed, and wholly without warrant of Scripture. The title of ELDER is indeed one of the most venerable. In the eleventh chapter of Numbers the Lord orders Moses to select seventy men—"elders"—"whom thou knowest to be ELDERS of the people, and bring them to the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. And I will come down and talk with thee there, and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them." This is the beginning of the Sanhedrim. If we add to this grand piece of history, the glory which the Apocalypse throws around this title, we can understand why it has been appropriated to express the highest order of the New Testament ministry. "I was in the Spirit: and behold a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. And he that sat was to look upon like a jaspar and a sardine stone; and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. And round about the throne were four and twenty seats; and upon the seats I saw four and twenty ELDERS sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold." The Spirit, speaking by St. John, thus firmly establishes the dignity of this title by placing those who bear it next to the throne.

Stripped of this vain assumption, there is nothing left these high-churchmen; if elders are equal to bishops, their occupation is gone. They would gladly assume to be the only channel and pipe through which spiritual life flows or can flow to mankind, and would like immensely to hold the keys of heaven and hell, and rattle them at the "seets;" but the great chart of life has mercifully delivered us from these self-pronounced dignitaries, as well as from that other toothless old giant who declares himself to be the "Vicar of Christ."

The Methodist church calls her ruling elders "bishops," but claims no superiority by Scripture order or right for them over other elders. In all the Protestant denominations of Europe, excepting the church of England, elders alone ordain. And during the days of Cranmer a convocation of archbishops, bishops, and divines of this church drew up "A Declaration made of the Functions, and Divine Institution of Bishops and Priests," in which they solemnly declare that "bishops and elders are one and the same office," which is duly signed by thirty-six of their highest functionaries, such as T. Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury; Edward, archbishop of York; John, bishop of London; Cuthbert, bishop of Dunham; John, bishop of Lincoln; John, bishop of Bath; Thomas, bishop of Ely; John, bishop of Bangor; Nicholas, bishop of Salisbury; Edward, bishop of Hinford; Hugo, bishop of Worcester; Richland, bishop of Chichester. These names are quite enough to convict modern high-church bishops of enormous pretension. And St. Paul says, "If a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself."

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

GREENSBORO, Ala., February 19, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Please call the attention of the members of the Mobile Conference to the resolutions adopted at its last session. The resolutions referred to form a part of the report of the special committee on the Southern University, and are as follows:

Resolved, That the Southern University is well worthy of the support and patronage of the church, and, as members of the Mobile Conference, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power to promote its interests.

Resolved, That the preachers of this Conference be required, on the second Sabbath in March, or as soon thereafter as circumstances will allow, to preach a sermon on the subject of education, and the propriety and obligation of sending our children to our own schools and colleges; and that each preacher take up a collection in behalf of the Southern University, and forward, at once, the amount received to the treasurer of the Board of Trustees.

Resolved, That the preachers, at the same time, give the opportunity to any who may feel disposed to become subscribers to the University Relief Association.

You can also state that money collected should be sent, without delay, to me, the treasurer of the University. Very truly your's,

N. T. LUPTON.

NATCHEZ DISTRICT.

JACKSON, La., Feb. 18, 1868.

Owing to the failure of his health, W. E. M. Linfield has resigned his pastorate of the Natchez station, and, by appointment of Bishop Paine, W. W. Drake will fill said vacancy, and F. W. Flours will take charge of Greenville station and the Presiding Eldership of Greenville district.

Owing to the failure of the preacher appointed to the East Feliciana circuit to fill his appointment, this circuit is merged into the Jackson and Clinton circuits, in charge of J. L. Forsythe, of Jackson, and Wm. P. Ballard, of Clinton.

THE MISSIONARY MOUSE-TRAP.

Our young contributors to the China proposition will be much pleased to learn that a rich vein has been struck in the missionary mine. A delightful little girl, Miss L. T. P., of Mississippi, sends us "twenty-five cents—proceeds of a mouse trap at fifty cents a dozen." We began at once, like the milk-maid with her basket of eggs, to calculate: "So many mice, at so much amounts to, let me see—a heap of money!" If all the mice could be caught, sold at a fair rate, and the "proceeds" promptly remitted, that would be nearly as much money as the missionaries need. We once saw a plow share turn up a mouse-nest, containing fourteen mice. That would have been a good chance for China, if there had been any generous young friend about, and if the idea had been at that time discovered what to do with them. But all inventions and discoveries must wait till their time comes, and we have never known till now the true use of mice. In our house they have been a great pest, in the wainscoting, in the cupboard, and in the wardrobe. Not satisfied with bread and cheese, and such things as the children eat, they nibble books, and shawls, and sometimes attack spelling books and skeletons of sermons. We do not believe that they can relish or have any real fancy for such unsatisfying morsels, but only do it from fullness, and a natural love of mischief. A sermon-eating mouse ought to be caught, and his "proceeds" sent to the heathen. And if the Sunday school children generally ever take this matter in hand they will make havoc of these mischievous nibblers. A mouse will soon destroy five cents' worth of grain, so that nothing is lost by having them caught at the rate of "fifty cents a dozen." There, then, is a wide field opened for ingenuity in catching. The people of New England have spent much time and genius upon mouse-traps, until they have managed to get nearly all the money there is in the country. Mind, we do not urge merely the taking mice—good thing as that may be to the farmer and housewife—there have been many mice caught in this world—but that we follow the example of our little friend who has discovered what to do with them after they are caught. She has gotten more out of the trap than went into it; she denies herself a good deal in order to do good, for twenty-five cents will buy many good things which she might fancy; and according to the size and smallness of her purse, and may be the slimness of it, that is a good deal of her own money for a little girl to give. If every grown-up person would give as much in proportion there would be money enough for all benevolent uses; but alas! these grown-up people set traps, a good many of them, and then may be never send any of the "proceeds" to China.

THE IMPEACHMENT.

We give a good deal of space to the important news from Washington. The policy of the Radical party begins to culminate. It has long since determined for and calculated upon the movement which is now inaugurated. The time necessarily required to prepare for the legal forms incident to impeachment will be employed in dragging the ten Southern States by the heels into the Senate and the House. Just in proportion to the unconstitutionality of the court, and the violence of the proceeding, will be the solemnity of its management, and the formal dignity of the trial. The President has not been taken by surprise. He has certainly had much reason for expecting at this Congress the full outpouring of all the vials of Radical wrath. We confess to but little confidence in either the impartiality or courage of the Supreme Court. It will sway with the stronger side, which ever that may be. Some great uprising or change in the public opinion of the people in the Northern States may determine that court upon the side of the Executive. The chances, we think, are against such a result. The Radical party will go to the verge of ruin, and bring the Constitution and everything else there, sooner than part with the power they now have. It cannot afford to go under; or if it must go, will prefer to sink amid universal wreck rather than to see any person or thing survive itself. Power can never be wrested from its hands but by power. The army alone can relieve the country from its domination. There may be ballotings and elections, but such quiet and primitive methods of expressing the will of the people will serve the purpose of an ad interim diversion, but will never change the government. The omnipotence of the ballot-box has passed forever away. What ever those who constituted the Federal army in the late war, or rather those who control that army, may decide upon will be the law and the constitution. It has been long apparent that the legislature at Washington and the quasi legislation for the unreconstructed States have only been a modified council of war, the main feature of which has consisted in army appropriations, army pensions, army bounties, soldiers' homesteads, and military bills passed for the benefit of army officers; and the main object of which has been to secure the favor of the army and at the same time accustom the country to a martial status. When and by what means we shall emerge from this condition into one of constitutional supremacy, our readers can alone determine by reading the history of States, modern and ancient.

THE CHINA MISSION.

MR. EDITOR: I hope the preachers of the Mississippi Conference will not fail to give their congregations, all of them, a chance to give something for Brother Lambuth. So far as I have been able to bring the subject before my congregations, they are willing to help, though it may be but a little.

I have just received $5 from L. M. Lum & Bro., Rooky Springs, Mississippi, for this cause. A lady, through Brother Hunnicutt, offers $5 in gold for this cause. Brother H. also proposes to give $10 for himself and wife. I hope there are other brothers and sisters, too, who will respond soon. Let us get our offerings together and send to Brother L. He needs all we can send him. Let us try to gladden him in his missionary work by this remembrance. And, Dr. Keener, keep up your proposition. I hope you will have large success. May be we can get all our amounts together, and send in one draft.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

BISHOP MARVIN IN LOUISVILLE.—Since the first week in January Bishop Marvin has been "on the wing" from his home at O'Fallon, Mo., in the interest of the Indian Mission Conference, over which he has spread his fostering—Episcopal wings. After leaving St. Louis he visited Memphis, Tennessee, where he spent two Sabbaths, dividing his ministrations between three churches. In his route to Louisville from Memphis he preached at Jackson and Clarksville, Tennessee, and Allensville and Russellville, Ky.; collecting, since his departure from home and before reaching this city, nearly seven hundred and fifty dollars for the Indian Missions.—Memphis Christian Advocate.—

LEMON PIE.—Grate the yellow part of the peel of one large lemon, and add it, with the juice, to two-thirds of a cup of sugar; mix smoothly one and one-half tablespoonful of flour to three-quarters of a teacupful of water; stir all together, and add the well beaten yolks of two eggs; bake, with only an under-crust, to a nice golden brown color; when done, pour over the tops the whites of two eggs beaten to a stiff froth, with two tablespoonfuls of powdered white sugar; set in the oven for a few minutes, to harden.

OBITUARIES.

JOHN DEVAN was born in Marengo Co., Alabama, August 18, 1842, and died at his father's residence, in Wilcox county, Alabama, November 27, 1867.

From childhood, taught by religious parents to acknowledge the obligations of Christianity in youth and manhood, he was not ashamed to bow to Christ, and esteem him as the chief good.

He had been, since 1859, a consistent member of the Methodist church, and never, to the writer's knowledge—who was his pastor during five years—did he by a single act dishonor his profession. He was married, about twelve months before his death, to Miss Mattie Moon, of Marengo county, Alabama, whom he has left with one little child to battle alone with life's trials. Truly may it be said of Brother Devan that in all the relations of life—as a son, a citizen, a husband, a father and a Christian—he was true and faithful. His end was tranquil, peaceful, triumphant. No fear of death or doubtful apprehension of the future disturbed his mind in the last trying hour. "Blessed, indeed, is the chamber where the good man meets his fate."

GEORGE F. ELLIS.

Died, of consumption, at Wildwood, Assumption parish, Louisiana, on Sunday, February 9, 1868, MAGGIE E., wife of William H. Beasley.

She had been for about eight years a member of the M. E. Church South. For many months preceding her death she was an invalid, and at times a great sufferer. Still under all she manifested uniformly a cheerful and patient spirit, and when finally the messenger came—having expressed herself as at peace with God and resigned to his will—quietly and calmly she passed away.

Thus it is that mortals are reminded, ever and anon, that all earthly ties must needs be severed. Reader, it is those only that are spiritual and heavenly that may not be broken off. May true wisdom, then, by its sacred ties of holy love, bind us ever to the pure and the good who inhabit the better land beyond.

P. M. G.

Died, November 29, 1867, in East Feliciana parish, ALBERT JOHNSTON, son of Rev. Thomas and Mrs. T. E. Price, aged four months.

PRICE ADVANCED—PAR AND INTEREST.

The Central Pacific Railroad,

THE BEST AND PRINCIPAL PORtion of the NATIONAL TRUNK LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT, is being rapidly carried forward by an unprecedented working force, and it is reasonably certain that the continuous overland railroad connection from New York to San Francisco will be made in 1870.

The United States Government furnishes, upon a subordinate and contingent lien, half the means for constructing the main stem line; and besides an absolute grant of 12,800 acres of valuable public lands per mile, the Central Pacific Railroad Company have received from California sources donations and concessions worth more than $3,000,000. The available resources of this company are therefore abundant for the purpose, amounting to $77,000,000 on the first 726 miles of the line, including loans secured by a first mortgage upon the whole property, to the same amount only as the United States subsidy bonds.

The results already attained, although under comparatively unfavorable circumstances, afford substantial ground for believing the Central Pacific to be the Most Favored, Productive and Valuable Railroad Enterprise in the Country.

In consequence of the large and rapidly increasing demand, the price of these bonds has been advanced, and the company are now offering for sale a limited amount of their

First Mortgage Six per Cent. Bonds,

Principal and interest payable in gold coin, in sums of $1,000 each; at par, and accrued interest from January 1st, in currency.

These bonds, it is believed, possess the elements of safety, reliability and profit in a greater degree than any other class of corporate securities now offered, and are therefore very desirable for steady investments of surplus capital.

Investors will bear in mind the following advantages:

I. They are the first mortgage on one of the most valuable and productive lines of railroad in the world.

II. The actual earnings from local business in 1867 were more than four times the annual interest engagements.

III. The hard part of the work is now done, and the prospects of rapid completion are favorable.

IV. The company have liberal subsidies, which enable them to prosecute the work with great vigor.

V. The management has been exceedingly prudent and frugal.

VI. There is already a large and growing settlement on the completed and graded line.

VII. The lands promise to be of immense value, 37,038 acres having been already sold.

VIII. Both principal and interest are explicitly made payable in gold coin.

IX. Both the aggregate amount of issue and their standing in Europe will insure for them continued activity and a high rank among standard securities.

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of from ten to fifteen per cent. in addition.

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return Express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

From the Little Ones.

GOING TO THE DISTRICT SCHOOL.

Barefoot boy and little girl,
She with rosy cheek and curl,
His a forehead brown with tan,
Sturdy little farmer man.

Old straw hat, with broken rim,
Is the least that troubles him,
As the dinner-pail he swings,
Full of mother's choicest things.

Happy little pair are they,
Chatting blithely on the way,
In the morning fresh and cool,
Going to the district school.

From the shady farm-house door
Mother watches, till no more
She can follow—out of sight
They are gone, her heart's delight.

Can you see them sitting there,
On the benches hard and bare,
Tired feet swinging to and fro,
Conning o'er the lessons low?

Sitting at the noon of school,
By the gurgling stream'let cool,
Mong the brakes and bending trees,
Eating up the bread and cheese?

Or, with merry laugh and shout,
When the boys and girls go out,
Books and pencils cast away,
See them jump, and swing, and play?

Hark! the ferule on the pane,
Rap, and rap, and rap again,
Rushing in with cheeks aglow,
Half reluctantly they go.

Glide the busy hours away,
Till the warm sun's western ray
Slants across the open door,
And the hours of school are o'er.

Happy, healthy girl and boy,
Full of simple, careless joy,
Free from tyrant fashion's rule,
Going to the district school.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"Am I too Little to go to Heaven?"

Mr. Editor: One balmy morning in early May a group of young children closed the farm-yard gate for a merry stroll into the fragrant woods. They had scarcely passed out of the large enclosure when a little piping voice called behind them: "Wait for me, Tissie, I want to see the little birds and wabbits."

"You are too little," replied the older voices; "go back to the house." And on the trio walked or ran, with no reproaches of conscience because of the young lamb thus left, with her young heart and her young hopes painfully crushed.

Mary, and Susie, and Janie gamboled away the morning, returning home at noon, flushed with the rollicking enjoyment of the ramble, and all unmindful of the thoughtless wrong they had done little Lily.

A few days more and Lily bowed her fair head, and was sick. The blue eyes were too bright and the velvety cheeks too red, while the plump white arms restlessly tossed about the snowy pillow. She was in much distress of mind in addition to her illness. A mother's heart and a mother's love intuitively made the discovery; and "my little Lily, my suffering lamb, tell mother what troubles you," was answered by the dear little thing with: "Oh, mamma! am I too little to go to heaven?" This unlooked-for query startled the fond parent, for all true mothers know what Christ has said of little children. She called the little girls—our rovers of the morning—to inquire of them concerning Lily's trouble, and their faces paled with the rebuking memory of what they had told her at the farm-yard gate. It was long before the tender mother could entirely dissipate the childish sorrow, but she finally cheered her drooping flower, and God spared her. This painful lesson was not lost upon Mary, and Susie, and Janie, who never left her again in their rambles to the great green, beautiful wildwood, where dwelt the "little birds and wabbits."

From the Child's Paper.

THE HURT LEG.

A poor child, some months ago, hurt her leg by a fall; and by and by it became so bad that her parents were afraid she must lose it. Now in our medical college there is a time set apart, twice a week, when the poor and suffering may come and receive the best medical advice free of all expense. The child's father carried her there. When the surgeons came to examine her poor leg they found it in a very bad condition; so they gave her something to smell, which put her into a sleep so sound that she knew nothing of what they were doing. While asleep they opened the leg, and found the bone dead and loose, as if it had been a hard, dry stick in the flesh, irritating it and making sore. So they took out the whole. The dead bone, and very carefully did up the wound, and sent her home.

The surgeons could indeed take out the old bone; but could they put in a new one? No, nothing like it. But there comes to the bedside of that child an unseen Physician who puts in, little by little, what is becoming a new bone. A new bone is actually growing where the old one was; and soon the child will have its leg all mended, and be able to run around as it used to do.

What a wonderful Physician is that! How can he put in, particle by particle, atom after atom of soft matter, carried there and left in just the right spot, and then make it harden and turn into bone?

Ah, yes; and he can do more than all this. He can take away the "heart of stone, and give a heart of flesh." He can give a "new heart." How he does it, we know not any more than we know how the new bone in this child's leg is to grow.

Our surgeons do their best for the poor child without fee or reward. So does Jesus give his skill and services "without money and without price." There are some cases brought to these physicians which they cannot cure; but none are brought to Jesus so bad that he cannot cure. This college is open to the poor only on certain days; but Jesus ever stands at the door, and you may knock, and he will open it. This little one may pass out of the surgeon's mind till she come again; but out of the thoughts of the great Physician the sick one is never absent for a moment.

What I have just told you is from a fine little book called "Nuts for Boys to Crack," by Dr. Todd; and I will end by asking you if this wonderful and blessed Physician, the Lord Jesus Christ, is your Physician, my children? Oh, I am sure you often feel hurt and down-hearted, and wish you were better every way. Jesus can help you. He can make you all right, and nobody else can.

SCIENTIFIC.

MANUFACTURING ICE.

A London paper says: "Of course every chemist knows a dozen methods of freezing water. The fault of the ordinary recipes is that freezing powders never can produce more than a little film or crust of ice. Recently, however, a most efficient and satisfactory process has been patented by Mr. Edward Welch, of Harrow—one of the many able students turned out by the engineering department of King's College. It consists of an air-pump with double action, communicating to a cylinder, with concentric chambers surrounding the receptacle of the water to be frozen. The water occupies the central space; next a circular chamber, containing ether; then a third, filled with powdered charcoal; then a fourth, called the condensing chamber; and finally a coil of small tubing inside a large pipe, wound round the last space. The arrangement is, of necessity, hard to comprehend without a diagram, but the action is so simple that it will go far to explain the nature of this most ingenious machine. The pump, when set in motion, produces a vacuum in the ether chamber; the ether rises in vapor toward the pump through one of the union pipes, producing a great degree of cold; a compression pipe from the pump forces it back to the condensing chamber, and also through the small tubing around this; and while the compression reduces it again to the liquid form, a stream of water through the outer pipe of the condensing coil carries off the heat thus engendered. Meantime the partition of powdered charcoal most effectually cuts off all possible communication of the disengaged heat to the other chamber of the water which is to be frozen. There is a receptacle fitted with a float-valve, which takes the ether, now reliquified, and discharges it back again into the vacuum chamber, so that, once set in motion, not a particle of the costly spirit escapes from the machine. It rises in vapor, freezing the water; is compressed back again; reliquified; its caloric abstracted; that caloric taken away altogether by the out flow of water; and the transformed vapor then restored to its original duty, with an unbroken and almost unfailing succession. The principle is perfect, and the practice so good that in about a quarter of an hour a cylinder of solid ice is produced; nor is there any limit to the manufacture except labor; for the ether never diminishes. The inventor purposes to simplify his pump and work it by an ordinary head of water, when the kitchen tap of a dwelling house would accomplish every step of the process except lifting the ice out and putting it on the table. As a method of supplying real block-ice—especially for hospitals, foreign stations, and out-of-the-way places—the machine is as useful an application of high scientific knowledge as could be seen."

FARM AND GARDEN.

From the California Spectator.

ON TRANSPLANTING TREES.

The proper season for transplanting varies with different cultivators. Many prefer autumn planting, and the reason they give for their preference is this: When trees are planted in autumn, they say, the ground becomes better settled about the roots of the trees, and they are then enabled to throw out fibres in the spring. We greatly prefer spring planting for nearly all varieties of trees, for this reason: If planted in the fall, very soon after setting out, the trees have the heavy fall rains, which renders the loose earth around the trees a perfect mortar, and the wind then blows the tree to and fro, making a circle or hole around the tree externally, about three inches from the trunk all around, which freezes hard at night, and presents in the morning a rocky wall around the tree, and as the hole is about six inches larger than the collar of the tree, it chafes off the bark around at the collar, and unless some manure is placed by it the frost will extend down around the tree and freeze the small roots. Still we have seen good success in fall planting of apples and pears and quinces. The following brief rules may be some guide to those who have not had any experience in setting out trees: 1. Never plant a tree until the ground has been first well pulverized. To plant trees in holes, as many persons do, is almost fatal to their growth. 2. Deep planting is a great error in this country, and more die from this than any other cause. They may thrive for a year or two, but soon die, and apparently without any other cause. The fibrous or surface roots should not be more than an inch and a half or two inches below the surface of the ground. 3. Commence planting by taking out the earth to a foot or more in depth, and of sufficient width to admit all the roots without crowding, bending or breaking them. If the soil is poor, compost, well-decayed, rotten manure, wood-ashes, or a little lime (if the tree planted is apple or pear) may be thrown advantageously into the hole below the bottom of the roots. Then fill in among the roots with earth, well mixed with fine compost manure, using the hand to scatter it well among the small fibres, and do not leave any large holes under the tree to act as miniature cisterns. 4. Before planting prune all the roots that have been injured in removal with a sharp knife, but do not cut them off with a dull spade, as many do. Shorten such roots as are too long, and take out those that are too much crowded; avoid injuring or cutting any of the small fibres. 5. Prune the top and branches of the tree in proportion, or rather more in proportion to the pruning done to the roots. 6. Fill the earth firmly in and around the roots. Do not shake the tree up any—giving it a few shakes at its base will be sufficient. Fill the holes up carefully and do not throw too much ground in at once. If dry weather ensues, a pale of water may be given to each tree, and the soil around the tree could be then slightly earthed over to prevent evaporation. If hot and dry weather succeed during the season, then mulch with coarse straw manure, which is best, or straw, hay, leaves, etc. In Europe—a custom but seldom thought of in the United States—before planting an orchard the ground is thoroughly subsoiled or trench-plowed to the depth of eighteen inches or two feet, and we consider it the first and most important operation in the preparation of the ground for an orchard, unless the soil be so gravelly as to render this process useless. It is impossible for a tree to flourish when it is surrounded by a thick sod.

Verdant fields, bright with white clover, or fresh springing grasses, together with the blossoming of shrubs and trees, make many days of the February of the Gulf States and the far South among some of the most delightful of the year. Plowing for spring wheat and for other crops gives employment to the laborers and teams, and the season of the work fairly begins with the warm, drying weather usually occurring at this time of the year.

The Northern farmer buffets the winter usually for a good part of this month. He may look for deep snows, powerful rains, ice storms, and hard-freezing-weather, with the thermometer below zero, and need not be disappointed if before the 20th the frost is all out of the ground south of latitude 41 degrees, and bluebirds are singing. Nevertheless it will probably freeze up again, and the poor little birds will look blue enough.

The days are much longer, and they should show notably more work done than those of December or even January; nevertheless, there is comparative leisure, and season for reviewing the past year's work and laying plans for the coming months, when so much hard labor will be demanded that the mind will not give itself readily to continuous thought. Whatever plans are made, on this very account, if for no other reason, should be put upon paper, so that when the time comes for their prompt execution, they shall not be forgotten. The season of field work, when it does come, will be likely to come all at once, and then you will feel as if every moment were gold, as if the horses and oxen, though doing their utmost, did not walk half fast enough. Therefore use the leisure of this month to get all ready for spring work.—American Agriculturist.

Turkeys.—Every one who has raised turkeys knows the difficulty of rearing them for the first two months. They are the most helpless of poultry, say up to three months old, suffering in various ways—from sudden changes of weather, from wet grass, too early or too late exposure mornings and evenings, and also from injudicious feeding. The turkey-hen is a very poor nurse, and seems to have far less of the maternal instincts than the common hen. She drags her young after her, through high wet grass, with her long stride frequently crushing one to death, but never looking or seeming to care; and if on setting out on a morning jaunt with ten or twelve young ones, she comes back with only one, she does not seem the least disconcerted, but takes the matter as coolly as a defeated politician. The turkey-hen, perhaps, has very little brains, or she would not be so foolish as she is. It is undoubtedly best to confine her for a few weeks after hatching in the yard, or perhaps still better, to raise the brood under a hen. It is generally admitted that the young Bronze turkeys stand many more hardships than the common breed, and a much larger per centage are reared.

A preference is given to this variety on account of the greater tenderness of flesh which is admitted to be characteristic of the wild bird.

Bronze turkeys are so called because, with a prevailing black color or ground, there is often a very distinct bronze or copper hue, showing to advantage, especially in strong sunlight. They are often, however, entirely black, and vary so much that color can hardly be relied on as a test of purity. One of the largest we ever saw weighed forty pounds, and was quite light in color. Black, however, with the bronze shading, is most sought after.—American Farmer.

Green and Hot-Houses.—As the weather gets milder more care will be required with the fires, as sudden changes are apt to occur. Maintain an uniform temperature, which should be 10 degrees to 15 degrees lower at night than during the day.

Camellias that have done flowering are to be pruned, and if the pots are full of roots, re-pot.

Azaleas will now be coming into flower; give more water, and when in bloom, shade from the hot sun in the middle of the day.

Potting of plants that appear to be sickly may be done, cutting them back at the same time. It is not always necessary to put into a larger pot, but shake out the old earth from the roots and re-pot with fresh soil, in the same pot.

Annuals may now be sown, either to bloom in pots or for turning out into the borders.

Propagation of bedding plants of all kinds should be going on. Our most successful growers use very short cuttings, of tender and succulent growth.

Forcing Plants.—Hardy shrubs and herbaceous plants that were potted for forcing may be brought into a warm place; give them water as they start.

Bulbs, as they pass out of flower, are to have the flower stalk cut away, but should not be allowed to dry until the leaves show signs of withering.—American Agriculturist.

A Wrench—Its Value.—Few farmers or owners of wagons and carriages appreciate the value of this little instrument—a wrench—and, failing to do so, foot many a costly bill in needless repairs and new purchases. You cannot allow one part of machinery to work loose from its fastenings without injury to all the rest. At least once a month every nut and bolt in the running gears of a wagon or carriage should be examined and tested with a wrench. By this precaution the carriage will be preserved and accidents avoided. So important is this that artillery officers are compelled to report to the Ordnance Department how often the nuts are turned up on artillery carriages.—Kansas Farmer.

The New Orleans Picayune proposes to increase sugar culture in Louisiana by separating the business of cultivation from that of milling the cane. The land could then be divided into moderate farms, which should be united by tramways, with sugar mills in the centre of each district.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.

TENTH SESSION.

The exercises of the school will be resumed on Wednesday, October 2d, 1867.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education.

Particular care is bestowed on the moral and social culture of the pupils.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a satchel for dirty clothes.

It is urgently requested that Students be prompt in their attendance. A few days absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms: Board and Tuition per session, $360.
Payments.—$200 in advance—balance 1st March.

Tuition of Day Scholars, per session, $75 00 payable—one half in advance—balance 1st March.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the School demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as Teachers, gentlemen of the highest character and ability,

It is an unfailing remedy in all cases of Neuralgia, Facialis, often effecting a perfect cure in less than twenty-four hours, from the use of no more than two or three pills.

No other form of Neuralgia or Nervous Disease has failed to yield to this wonderful remedial agent.

Even the severest cases of Chronic Neuralgia and general nervous derangements,—of many years standing,—affecting the entire system, its use for a few days, or a few weeks at the utmost, always affords the most astonishing relief, and very rarely fails to produce a complete and permanent cure.

It contains no drugs or other materials in the slightest degree injurious, even to the most delicate system, and can always be used with perfect safety.

It has long been in constant use by many of our most eminent physicians, who give it their unanimous and unqualified approval.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Dorenius, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S.: by forming or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious efforts, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1845, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls; the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution in the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge of its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus combining this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is to all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, we also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the city, equal to any offered in any other house in this line.

PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC,

Or, Vegetable Medicine.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best remedy that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general movement of the market has shown but little animation since our last issue. We notice only a moderate business doing in the wholesale trade, much less than is usual at this season of the year. Operations in our leading staple have been on a limited scale and at a material decline. The sales of sugar and molasses have been restricted by light supplies, but the receipts have met a ready sale at full prices. This remark applies also to most articles of Western produce.

Cotton.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed dull and drooping at the reduced rates of 20 to 20¾ for Ordinary, 21⅛ to 22 for Good Ordinary, 22⅛ to 22¾ for Low Middling, 23¼ to 23⅛ for Middling, and 24 for Strict Middling, since which prices have suffered a further decline of 1⅛ to 1¼c., while operations have been on a very limited scale. On Saturday the movement commenced with a limited demand, and continued languid throughout the day, the sales comprising only 2,500 bales, while the bulk of the business was at an irregular decline of ⅛c. to 1 and 1¼ from previous rates. Operations were somewhat checked by its being a holiday, the banks being closed, and the regular movement of exchange interrupted accordingly, and many factors covered up their samples, anticipating that the rise in gold and foreign bills would cause a favorable reaction. On Monday, however, the accounts from Liverpool being still more unfavorable, prices continued to exhibit a downward tendency, and with a very moderate demand—much more so than might be inferred from the extent of the business—3,800 bales changed hands, mostly on the basis of 21c. for Low Middling and 22c. for Middling. On Tuesday the market opened dull and drooping, and the prices paid during the morning indicated increased weakness, Low Middling ruling at 20c. and Middling at 21 to 21¼c., but later in the day encouraging telegrams from New York imparted more confidence to factors, and prices slightly stiffened, closing at about our subjoined quotations. The sales summed up 5,500 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,800 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 9,677 bales, against 14,442 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 4,765 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 433,080 bales, against 554,239 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 216,818 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 91,492 bales to Great Britain, of 67,688 to France, and of 113,627 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	18 to 18¼
Good Ordinary	19 to 19½
Low Middling	20¼ to —
Middling	21⅛ to —
Strict Middling	22 to —

Sugar.—The demand is fair and the receipts have sold readily at 10 to 10¼c. per lb. for inferior, 12 to 12½ for common, 13¼ to 13½ for good common, 14 for fair, 14¼ for good fair, 15 for fully fair, 16⅛ for prime, 16¾ for choice, 16¼ to 16½ for yellow clarified, 16¼ to 17 for white, and 14½ to 14¾ for seconds.

Molasses.—The receipts are light, and they are sold as soon as they are landed at full prices. The sales comprise 400 barrels, at 70c. per gallon for fermenting, 70 for reboiled, 80 for prime reboiled, and 85 for cistern bottom and molasses mixed; 50 bbls. Boston reboiled syrup sold on the spot at 75c., and 68 bbls., to arrive, at 70 per gallon.

Flour.—The supplies are light, especially of superfine and double extra, which are the grades most in request, and prices for them are much stiffer. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 6,000 bbls.

Butter.—There have been more liberal arrivals of Western. The demand is fair. We quote good to choice Western at 35 to 40c., and inferior at 20 to 30c. The stock of Goshen is light.

A Complete Theological Library, Embracing the Features of all Biblical and Theological Dictionaries extant.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York,

Have just Issued:

The First Volume of a New

CYCLOPÆDIA OF BIBLICAL, THEOLOGICAL, AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE. By Rev. John M'Clintock, D. D., and James Strong, S.T.D. With Maps and numerous Illustrations. To be completed in about Six Volumes, Royal 8vo, of about One Thousand Pages each. Vol. I., comprising the Letters A and B, is now ready. The remaining Volumes are in rapid progress, and will appear at short intervals. Price per volume, Cloth, $5 00; Sheep, $6 00 Half Morocco, $8 00.

"The Cyclopædia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature is in our judgment one of the most valuable works which have been recently issued. For thorough research, comprehensive range, accurate scholarship, and strict fidelity, and vastly superior to any work of its class. It is cordially recommended, not only to ministers, but also to all other intelligent Christians."

T. A. Morris, E. S. Janes, L. Scott, M. Simpson, O. C. Baker, E. R. Ames, C. Kingsley, D. W. Clark, E. Thomson, } Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Publishers have also received letters highly commending the plan and execution of this work from the following eminent scholars and divines:

BISHOP SIMPSON says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the best Magazines published for children."

BISHOP STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I believe that its introduction into every household would prove a blessing to young and old."

REV. GEO. D. BOARDMAN says of

"THE CHILDREN'S HOUR:"

"I am delighted with 'The Children's Hour.' I do not see how a more entertaining, instructive or profitable Magazine could be put in the hands of our children."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES says of

CONFEDERATE ORPHANS.

Rev. T. S. Abernethy, jr., is in the city on a mission to secure aid for the only Confederate Orphan Asylum in the Southwest. It is situated at Lauderdale Springs, Miss., and is already in full operation. Gov. Humphreys is President of the Board of Trustees. Mr. A. is well known to us as a member of the Alabama Conference of long and high standing. He is officially commended to the charity of all Masons by Thomas J. Gathright, A. M., Grand Master of Masons in Mississippi. We append the following communication from him, and recommend the noble cause to all of our people.

Confederate Soldiers' and Orphans' Home, and Manual Labor School.

LAUDERDALE SPRINGS,
Mobile and Ohio Railroad, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say to the citizens of New Orleans that I am now in the city soliciting donations, either in money, food, clothing, medicine or books, for this worthy charity.

This is no church or State institution, but proposes to take a kind and Christian care of the destitute orphans, of both sexes, of those Confederate soldiers who fell in the late unhappy war, without reference to church or State.

There are now in the Home two hundred boys and girls of this class, representing several of the States lately in conflict with the United States. This is as great a number as we can provide for at present. But we are trying to so enlarge our capacity as to take care of all destitute orphans of deceased soldiers. And surely none, whatever their opinions or antecedents politically, will deny us the privilege of feeding our hungry little ones.

Other cities North and South have responded generously to this call, and I know that New Orleans will not suffer herself to be outdone by her sister cities of the South, poor alike in this world's goods, but of their penury contributing the mite that blesses both the giver and the receiver.

I propose to call on the citizens at their places of business and ask them for aid. I hope, also, that pastors and presiding officers of fraternal bodies and corporations will take up collections for me. I hope soon to have some public entertainment in behalf of the Home, of which due and timely notice will be given. I also ask the sympathy and aid of editors in making this worthy charity known to the people.

I can be found at the Book Depository, 112 Camp street, or at my room, 54 City Hotel, corner of Camp and Common streets.

I refer to Bishops Andrew, Wightman and McTyeire; also to Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener, of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and Rev. Dr. Thos. O. Summers, of the Nashville Christian Advocate, to Rev. R. J. Harp, bookseller and stationer, and Book Agent of the Southern M. E. Church, 112 Camp street.

Any donations or communications for me, left either with Dr. Keener or Rev. R. J. Harp, will reach me and be gratefully received.

The Home is under the most judicious management, and all donations will be applied to their specified use at once, and in the most economical manner.

I refer also to Thos. S. Gathright, A. M., Summerville, Miss., Grand Master of Masons for the State of Mississippi; and to any of the members of the Grand Lodge lately held in Natchez.

This is the only institution, that I have any knowledge of, of the kind in the South—the only one that proposes to be semi-national.

As indicated above, this is a Manual Labor School, in which quite a number of the mechanical trades are taught, and farming practiced to some extent. The boys are taught carpentering, blacksmithing, cabinet work, brick-making and masonry. The girls are instructed in all manner of useful housewifery. We have also an excellent day school and Sabbath school.

We are in great want at this time, and need more, especially money and food, bacon, flour and corn, sugar and molasses.

We do not ask or expect much from any one, but will be grateful for the mickles that make the muckle.

My residence is in Enterprise, Miss., and any communication from abroad should be addressed to me there.

THOS. S. ABERNETHY, JR., Agent,
Room 54 City Hotel, N. O.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Senate—H. Marie petitions for reward for capturing Surratt. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

A remonstrance against the constitutionality of the Supreme Court and reconstruction bills was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The Senate resumed impeachment procedure. A severe contest arose over limiting speeches. The Radicals, however, contended that the prosecution would be restrained as well as the defence. It is noticeable that several Republicans vote frequently with the Democrats. The highest vote of the minority to-day reached 20, which would prevent impeachment by two votes.

8.30 P. M.—Senate still in session, having reached the 22d article of precedure without material amendment. They will conclude the matter to-night.

Wade does not vote nor preside during these proceedings.

10 P. M.—Senate still in session. Stevens, alluding to his articles, and which he claims were omitted by mistake, and which charges Johnson with an attempt to seduce Grant, says in conclusion: "What chance then has Mr. Johnson with that article, which was left out, in order to give him a loop hole? You see how fair we are. [Laughter.] What chance has Andrew Johnson if that article is inserted? Unfortunate man, thus surrounded, hampered, tangled, with his own wickedness. Unfortunate, unhappy man, behold your doom."

The above article was shut out by the arrival, as per agreement, of the hour when amendments and speeches should cease.

The managers selected their own chairman; they will approach the Senate formally to-morrow, and court will commence on Wednesday, unless the Senate's rules of procedure are amended, when Johnson will appear and ask time for preparation, after the expiration of which the court will sit every day till the trial closes, Sunday's excepted.

Sumner's motion in executive session, that during the pending proceedings Congress hold no official communication with the President, was supported by his own vote only.

House.—The House assembled at 10 o'clock, and impeachment articles were discussed throughout the day. Several verbal amendments were made. The 7th article was stricken out, and at 4 o'clock they were adopted. The vote on the first article was 126 to 40, and nearly the same vote on all the others, except the last, which was 108 to 48.

The protest, signed by forty-five members, was not received, nor allowed printed. Butler, Stevens and Jenks failed getting in new sections.

The managers elected are the same as those nominated in caucus. A Democrat was chosen as teller, but declined to act, wishing to have nothing to do with it.

The Clerk of the House was directed to inform the Senate of these proceedings.

Adjourned.

THE ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT.—REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

On the 29th ult. Mr. Boutwell presented the report of the select committee appointed by the House of Representatives to prepare articles of impeachment against the President. We copy as follows:

ARTICLE I. That Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, unmindful of the duties of his office and the requirements of the Constitution, removed Edwin M. Stanton from the War office, in violation of the tenure of office bill, and is therefore guilty of a high misdemeanor.

II. That Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, contrary to the tenure of office bill, appointed, without the advice and consent of the Senate, then in session, Lorenzo Thomas Secretary of War, and is therefore guilty of a high misdemeanor.

III. That said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, is guilty of a high misdemeanor in this, that without authority, and while the Senate was in session, he appointed Lorenzo Thomas Secretary of War ad interim, in violation of the Constitution, no vacancy having happened in said office during the recess of the Senate, and no vacancy existing at the time of the appointment.

IV. That Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did unlawfully conspire with Lorenzo Thomas and others to prevent E. M. Stanton from holding the War office, in violation of the Constitution, and the act punishing conspiracies, and is guilty of high crimes.

V. That said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did conspire with Lorenzo Thomas and others, to, by force, prevent and hinder the execution of the tenure of office bill; and in pursuance of said conspiracy did attempt to prevent E. M. Stanton from holding the War office, whereby said Johnson is guilty of high misdemeanor.

VI. That said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did unlawfully conspire with Lorenzo Thomas by force to take the property of the U. States in the War office, contrary to the act punishing certain conspiracies, and with the intent to violate the tenure of office bill, whereby said Andrew Johnson committed a high crime.

VII. That said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, unlawfully conspired with Lorenzo Thomas to prevent the execution of the tenure of office bill, and, in pursuance of said conspiracy, unlawfully attempted to prevent E. M. Stanton from holding the War office, whereby said Andrew Johnson is guilty of a high misdemeanor.

VIII. That said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, unlawfully conspired with Lorenzo Thomas to seize the property of the United States in the War office, with intent to violate the tenure of office bill, whereby said Andrew Johnson is guilty of a high misdemeanor.

IX. That said Andrew Johnson, President, etc., contrary to the tenure of office act, and in violation of the Constitution, and without the advice and consent of the Senate, then in session, appoint Lorenzo Thomas Secretary of War ad interim, whereby said Andrew Johnson is guilty of a high misdemeanor.

X. That said Andrew Johnson, President, etc., in disregard of the Constitution and laws, did bring before him Brevet Major Gen. Emory, commanding the Department of Washington, and endeavored to induce said Emory, in violation of a law of Congress, to obey such orders as he, Andrew Johnson, might give, and which should not be issued through the General of the Army, whereby said Andrew Johnson is guilty of a high misdemeanor, and the House of Representatives by protestation reserving to themselves the liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any further articles, or further accusations against the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, and of replying to his answers, which he shall make to the articles herein preferred against him, and of offering proof to the same and every part thereof, and to all and every other article of impeachment, which shall be exhibited by them as the case shall require, and do demand that the said Andrew Johnson may be put to answer the high crimes and misdemeanors in office herein charged against him, and that such proceedings, examinations, trials and judgments may be thereupon had, and given, as may be agreeable to law and justice.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—House.—A motion to suspend the rules and admit a protest against impeachment was lost by 49 to 72.

The impeachment managers introduced two additional articles. The seventh of the first series being stricken out, these are known as ten and eleven. They were adopted by a strict party vote. The tenth is Butler's, charging the President with misdemeanors in speeches while swinging around the circle. The eleventh is comprehensive, charging the President with saying, in 1866, in Washington, that Congress was illegal, and could only act so far as he chose to recognize it; and violation of two or three bills in his efforts to keep Stanton out of office, after the Senate had overruled his reasons for suspension. This article includes Stevens' charges, which failed yesterday.

The managers are authorized to send for persons and papers.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The rules of procedure were adopted, after amendment, taking from the Chief Justice the right of decision on preliminary and interlocutory questions. All are referred to the court, and to be decided without division, unless the yeas and nays are demanded by one-fifth.

If the Senators desire to argue such questions the court will be cleared.

The Republicans who voted against restricting the Chief Justice were: Anthony, Morrill, Sherman, Sprague and Williams.

Stevens, alluding to his additional article which he claimed was omitted by mistake, and which was killed by the arrival of the hour when amendments and speeches must cease, said:

"If there be shrewd lawyers, as I know there will be, and caviling judges, and if without that article they do not acquit him, they are greener than ever I was when I commenced to practice at the Court of Quarter Sessions."

PROGRESS OF THE IMPEACHMENT MOVEMENT.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Senate.—The chair submitted a communication from Chase, which was referred to a special committee.

The Sergeant-at-Arms announced the impeachment managers. The managers approached the bar accompanying the members of the House. Bingham then read the articles. Butler's, which quotes largely from the President's most stinging speeches, caused a sensation. The chair said the Senate would take action upon the matter, and the managers retired.

A committee of three Senators was appointed to notify the Chief Justice and to conduct him to the Vice President's seat to-morrow at 1 o'clock.

Several votes taken during the proceedings indicated the determination on the part of the Senate to adhere to its rules, notwithstanding Chase's letter.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Wade presided to-day during the entire proceedings. This probably settles the question as to whether he will vote on the final issue.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Chase writes to the Senate, expressing in mild and somewhat indirect terms non-concurrence with some of their preliminary proceedings, holding that when the Senate sits for impeachment trial it sits unquestionably as a court. The Senate must necessarily receive notice of intention to impeach from the House, but the organization of the Senate into a court should precede the actual announcement of impeachment on the part of the House, and articles of impeachment should only be presented to the court of impeachment.

No summons or other process should issue, except from the organized court, and rules for the government of the court should be formed only by the court itself. Chase finds himself unable to come to any other conclusions than those herein given; but adds: "I am informed that the Senate has proceeded upon other views, and it is not my purpose to control what its superior wisdom may have directed."

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Chase, by implication, claims in his communication the right to sit as part of the court, and to govern it, from the following paragraph:

The Federalist is regarded as the highest cotemporary authority. On the construction of the Constitution and in the 64th number the functions of the Senate "setting in their judicial capacity as a court for the trial of impeachment," are examined.

In a paragraph explaining the reasons for not uniting the Supreme Court with the Senate in the Court of Impeachment, it is observed: "To a certain extent the benefits of that union will be obtained, of making the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court the president of the Court of Impeachment," as is proposed in the plan of the convention, while the conversion of an entire incorporation of the former into the latter will be substantially avoided.

Chase concludes all good citizens will fervently pray no occasion may ever arise when the grave proceedings now in progress will be cited as a precedent, but it is not impossible that such an occasion may come. Inasmuch, therefore, as the Constitution has charged the Chief Justice with an important function in the trial of an impeachment of the President, it has seemed to me fitting and obligatory when he is unable to concur in the views of the Senate concerning matters essential to the trial, that his respectful dissent should appear.

THREE-FOURTHS OF JEFFERSON BURNED.

Messrs. Brooks, Macdonald & Co., of this city, inform us that they received yesterday a dispatch from Jefferson, Texas, stating that three-fourths of that place is burned. Up to this writing we have been unable to obtain full details, but it is currently reported that no cotton, of which there is a considerable quantity stored in warehouses, was burned.

THE LAST RECONSTRUCTION ACT PASSED.—The House has agreed to the Senate amendments to the reconstruction act, and the measure, as it has gone to the President, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter any elections authorized by the act passed March 23, 1867, entitled an act supplementary to an act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States, passed March 2, 1867, and to facilitate restoration, shall be decided by a majority of the votes actually cast, and of the election in which the question of the adoption or rejection of any constitution is submitted, any person duly registered in the State may vote in the election district where he offers to vote, when he has resided therein for ten days next preceding such election, upon presentation of his certificate of registration, his affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence, under such regulations as the district commanders may prescribe.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, etc., That the constitutional convention of any of the States mentioned in the acts to which this is amendatory may provide that at the time of voting on the ratification of the constitution, registered voters may vote also for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and for all elective officers provided for by said constitution, and the same elected officers who shall make return of votes cast for the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall enumerate and certify to the votes cast for members of Congress.

THE TYNG TRIAL.—The New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, writing on the 18th, says: The summing up in the Tyng case, to-day, was attended by some incidents of peculiar interest. Ex-Judge Fullerton, for the defense, brought up the ritualistic practices at St. Albans, and was very severe upon those who sanctioned them and kept them in countenance. If, instead of reading prayers in a Methodist church, Mr. Tyng had gone to that place and participated in the hollow mockeries and idle forms which were in fashion there, no ecclesiastical censure would have been passed upon him. In this case they might, indeed, try and condemn him, but the victory would prove a defeat. [Here there were loud demonstrations of applause, which the court endeavored to repress.]

Judge Fullerton said he addressed the court and not the audience, but he wished to repeat the declaration that a victory of Mr. Tyng's enemies will assuredly be their defeat. The candles of St. Albans would be snuffed out. (Laughter.) They might try and they might condemn, but they could never hinder God's ministers from preaching the Gospel. (Voices, "Amen.") Counsel then alluded to the recent fraternization of Episcopalians and Presbyterians in Philadelphia. These men were not ashamed to pray together, and all right-minded Christian men would thank them for so doing. In conclusion he called upon the court to acquit his client; any other course would make him the martyr of the nineteenth century. (Great applause.)

Mr. Nash, for the presenters, (or the prosecution, as the lawyers would say,) was equally plain spoken. He said the whole business was simply to give effect to a certain declaration signed by Rev. Dr. Newton, Rev. John Cotton Smith, Rev. Dr. Tyng, Rev. S. H. Tyng, Jr., and Rev. Dr. Camfield, a declaration that nothing was in the gospel of Christ that was not preached by these persons. He did not believe these persons knew what they were saying; and they could only be excused on the ground of gross ignorance. He denied that the charge was that, being a minister of the gospel, he had preached the gospel. Suppose he went into a court in New Jersey (where his learned friend Parker was practicing) and preached a sermon there. There was a great difference between preaching the gospel and practicing it. This canon was to promote harmony and concord among brethren, as Paul and Barnabas promoted harmony, by separating when they could not agree. Moreover, he went on to say, Mr. Tyng ought to have confined himself to his own place, and not go roving about to minister. He had a parish in New York, embracing 265 families, making one thousand souls. He might preach 720 times a year, and visit all the poor families in the parish, and that surely was work enough to keep one man busy at home, without going over to evangelical New Jersey.

SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY

The following, from Rev. J. H. Mims, Collecting and Distributing Agent of the Southwestern Bible Society, is commended to the consideration of the friends of Bible distribution as evidence of the importance of the work in which we are continually engaged.

REV. J. E. C. DOREMUS, D. D.,
General Agent S. W. B. S.

SUGAR TOWN, Calcasieu parish, La.,
January 30, 1868.

REV. SIR: Inclosed please to find my report for January. Miles traveled, 225; number of families visited, 223; societies organized, 3; two of which, "Parish," and one "Branch," viz: Avoyelles Society, at Evergreen; Rapides Society, at Cheneyville, and a Branch Society of the latter at Spring Creek. We have had a great deal of bad weather during the month—rain, sleet and snow. I have faced it all, except on one day, when it rained all day; but it was spent profitably in writing to different parts of the field. I inclose a diary, giving a brief detailed statement of daily movements.

There is a great deal of destitution of the Scriptures in Rapides parish. Very few are able to buy. It is not uncommon with me to fall in with families destitute of both spiritual and temporal food. Many are subsisting on dry bread, and even that with them is scarce and hard to get. I have found in the last two days no less than seven families wholly destitute of God's word; not one of them able to buy a Bible. The further I travel in the Pine woods, west, the more destitution I find.

Here is a field white unto the harvest, but the laborers are few. Many are perishing for lack of knowledge. A temporal scarcity is equaled by a spiritual famine: cribs empty, purse exhausted, no Bible in the house. The precious word, both oral and written, is scarce. What a field for the philanthropist!

My heart was wrung with pity, a few days ago, when calling on a family, I found them in a miserable shanty, with a dirt floor, barefoot, scantily clothed, living on dry bread, several sick, and all looking the picture of death; without medicine or nourishment suitable for the sick; the father fifteen miles distant, splitting rails for bread, no Bible in the house, not even a Testament. "We are members of the church," said the mother; "we have just settled this place, and find times very hard; we can't get meat to eat." Tears involuntarily filled my eyes; money with me was scarce, but I could not leave them without distributing a small pittance. I gave them a Bible worth 60 cents, in the name of your society; it was received with many thanks. I did not go far till I found another family on dry bread. But I cannot enlarge. I am not able to afford relief, and therefore must turn my eyes away from the scene.

I am of opinion that there are in the parish of Rapides not less than one hundred families, and one thousand adults, without the word of God. I could sell a great many family Bibles, and large-type Testaments and Psalms, if the people were able to buy them.

The two gentlemen whom I named to you have voluntarily undertaken to supply all the "Pan Handle" of Rapides parish. And another person has undertaken to supply four townships in N. Calcasieu parish. I left Bibles and Testaments with them; also at Sugar Town, in good hands; also at Many, Sandersville and Kirk's Mill. The societies, auxiliary to yours, which I have organized will do all they can to supply the destitutions which exist in their respective fields. I purpose to return, via Natchitoches and Alexandria, to get the box you sent thither, and thence to Lake Charles, in Calcasieu parish.

Respectfully submitted,

J. H. MIMS,
Col. and Dis. Agent, S. W. B. S.

CHICKEN PIE WITH RICE.—Cut up three young chickens into joints, and drop them into weak salt and water for half an hour. Have ready two quarts of rice boiled, but not steamed, into which stir a pound and a quarter of butter, a quart of milk, a little salt, and six well-beaten eggs. Put into your baking-dish half the quantity of this mixture, and place the chicken and a few slices of ham in it. Then pour in the remainder of the rice and egg, and rub a little flour and milk smoothly together, and put on the top, to make it brown nicely. This pie will be sufficient for twenty persons.

A LONDON LYRIC.

BY ROBT. BUCHANAN.

The wind is shrill on the hills, and the culver
Wheels up and down with a windy gleam;
The birch has unloosened her locks of silver,
And shaken them down on the pools of the stream;
Yet here I linger in London city,
Thinking of meadows where I was born—
And over the tiles, with her haunting pity,
Glimmers the moon, with her dripping horn.

O moon, pale siren, with wild eyes drinking
The light of the sun as he sweepeth by,
I am looking straight in those eyes, and thinking
Of one who has loved you longer than I;
I am asking my heart if you pity or cherish
The souls that you witch with a harvest call—
If the dream must die when the dreamer perish—
If it be idle to dream at all.

The waves of the city roll hither and thither,
The tumult deepens, the days go by,
The dead men vanish—we know not whither,
The live men anguish—we know not why;
The cry of the stricken is smothered never,
The shadow passes from street to street;
And, overhead, for ever and ever,
Goes the still white gleam of thy constant feet.

The hard men struggle, the students ponder,
The world rolls round on its westward way;
The gleam of thy beautiful night up yonder
Is pale on the dreamer's cheek all day;
The old earth's voice is a sound of weeping,
All round her shores the waters cry;
There is no calm and there is no sleeping,
But thy still white presence goes nightly by.

Another summer, new hopes departed,
Yet here we are lingering, you and I,
I on the earth, with my hope prone-hearted,
You, through the silence of stars, in the sky!
You are there! I am here! and the reaping and sowing
Of the year of harvest is over and done,
And the hoary snow-drift will soon be blowing
Under the wheels of the whirling sun.

While tower and turret lie silvered under,
When eyes are closed and the lips are dumb,
In the nightly pause of the human wonder,
From dusky portals, I see thee come;
And whoso wakes, and beholds thee yonder,
Is witched by thee till his days shall cease;
For over his eyes, wheresoever he wander,
Dwelleth the vision of God's white peace!

LETTER FROM ABINGDON.

ABINGDON, VA., Jan. 10, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I ask the privilege of replying, through the columns of your most valuable paper, to numerous inquiries addressed to me respecting the male and female colleges located in this section of Virginia, particularly of Martha Washington College, at this place.

I am most happy to perceive in these inquiries a growing disposition in the parents of the South to secure to their children at least the advantages and permanent blessings of a thorough and finished education—a benefit that can never be overrated under any circumstances whatever, but now rendered, by present surroundings, a matter of the highest conceivable importance. While our children were blessed with plenty, and large prospective fortunes were awaiting their maturity, there existed a much less necessity for intellectual culture than now, since all these fair prospects have been swept away by the destroyer.—Hence, while I most cheerfully reply to the interrogatories of my friends, I desire to do so through your columns, and thereby present more prominently before its readers an institution than which there is none, in my judgment, more worthy of Southern patronage, and where a most thorough education may be secured at comparatively little cost.

Were it not for extending this article to an inconvenient length, I might say much of the college buildings, but will simply add that they are spacious, elegant and very substantial brick structures, affording most comfortable accommodations for some one hundred and fifty young ladies. It is surrounded by beautifully-improved grounds of about fifteen acres, most ample for healthy exercise, with pleasant shady walks and groves, an abundance of fine fruit, and an ample supply of the purest water. It is surrounded, too, by lovely verdant hills, and in full view of majestic mountains, so that to whatever point the eye may be directed the most beautiful and varied natural scenery meets the gaze of the admiring beholder.

Respecting the health of Abingdon I deem it entirely superfluous to say anything whatever, as this section is proverbially one of the healthiest on the continent; yet I cannot resist the inclination to state that ague and musquitoes are unknown here.

In regard to the society of this section I will only say that it has for more than half a century been the home of the Campbells, the Johnsons, the Floyds and Prestons—names which not only Virginia, but the nation, has delighted to honor, and whose intellects and deeds have contributed much to our country's glory. With these facts before the reader, I think I may safely leave him to form his own conclusions respecting the society of Abingdon.

The advertisement of the college, which will be found in your columns, furnishes full information respecting the cost of attending the institution for the scholastic year of ten months. Hence I need not reply to inquiries respecting that particular, but will anticipate and answer a question that will no doubt frequently arise, viz: How is it possible that good board and the facilities for acquiring a thorough and finished education can be furnished at such extremely low rates, and are not the charges a clear indication that the school is not all that its friends claim for it? My reply is simply this: Judging from such a standpoint the renowned schools of Prussia and Germany must also be deficient in whatever pertains to the highest order of literary institutions, because of the comparatively small sum it costs to attend them—the very reverse of which we know to be true.

And the cause that cheapens education there also operates to a considerable extent here. Abingdon, occupying as it does a point about equidistant between the great markets of the Northeast and Southwest, and surrounded by a most fertile section, producing in the greatest abundance all the necessaries of life, is in consequence one of the least expensive towns to live in I have ever visited.

A salary of one thousand dollars here is equal to two or more in our Southern cities. I will give a partial list of prices here, the most certain data upon which to calculate the cost of living. Flour, eight dollars; corn, fifty cents; pork, six to seven cents; beef, six cents; mutton, five to six cents; turkeys, fifty to seventy-five cents; chickens, ten to fifteen cents; butter, fifteen to twenty cents; eggs, ten to twenty cents; and doctors' bills scarcely averaging five dollars per annum. These prices clearly indicate that much less than half that is required to support a family in New Orleans would be ample here.

Again, this is not an individual enterprise, projected simply with a view to money-making, but an institution of the church, the sole object of which is to promote education and to secure its benefits to the greatest possible number at the least possible cost. Hence the charges are graduated to meet the actual expenses of the school, the use of the buildings, grounds, etc., of the college being a gratuity. The fact, also, that it is a denominational school belonging to the M. E. Church South, than whom none are more jealous of the reputation of their institutions of learning, is a certain guarantee that its officers and faculty will ever be composed of gentlemen of established reputation, of the purest character and highest scholarship.

The second or spring term commenced on the 19th of February, and will close about the middle of July; then a short vacation of some two weeks, affording the pupils time to visit some of the numerous points of interest or excellent mineral springs that abound in southwestern Virginia.

Then comes the fall term, which closes in time for the young ladies to participate in the Christmas festivities at home. The long vacation in winter and the very short one in summer were planned with special reference to the interest and convenience of pupils from the Southwest. By this arrangement parents may have their children at home at that period, which, while it is the least valuable for study and mental improvement, is yet the most pleasant and beautiful at the South, and in the cool and healthy regions of Virginia at a period the most uncomfortable and debilitating at home.

They, therefore, who send their daughters here may confidently expect to have them return home not only with their minds developed and their manners and tastes cultivated and refined, but with that, also, which is of but little if any less importance, improved health and greatly increased physical energy and power of endurance.

I may add here that all that has been said in reference to Martha Washington College is perfectly applicable to Emory and Henry, the Methodist male college, beautifully situated ten miles northeast of Abingdon, on the same great line of travel, the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, so that parents who have both sons and daughters to educate may, by sending to these two most excellent colleges, place them where they may see each other as often as is necessary or desirable. Two hundred and forty dollars will meet the cost of attending Emory and Henry ten months.

SANCTIFICATION.

MR. EDITOR: I have thought that it might tend to the encouragement of others, who are seeking the blessing of perfect love or entire sanctification, for me to publish in your paper my experience on that subject. Not long after my conversion, in reading the biographies of Bramwell, and Stoner, and Mrs. Fletcher, and Mrs. Rogers, as well as the writings of Mr. Wesley and others, I became convinced that there were higher attainments in the divine life than I had experienced; and as I set the highest estimate on spiritual riches, I commenced seeking for perfect love. I sought it diligently in the use of all the means of grace. I did not neglect any, yet I had many conflicts with the unbelief of my heart. Sometimes I would be tempted to believe that it was presumption for me to aspire after such a state of grace. Then I would reflect how many old professors were destitute of this blessing, and how few had attained to it; and then I would ask myself: "How can any one know when he has attained it? How can he distinguish between justification and entire sanctification? Justified persons are often filled with the spirit, and get happy, and yet they do not profess entire sanctification. How can a person distinguish between such a blessing and that of perfect love?" These reasonings and conflicts continued about four years, during all which time I was an earnest Christian, and the latter part a preacher. Finally, in the early part of November, 1836, I became more earnestly engaged in seeking the desire of my heart. In reading the arguments of Mr. Watson, in his Institutes, on this subject, every doubt was removed as to the possibility of attaining it in this life, and I redoubled my efforts. I had been in the habit of praying in secret four or five times a day, reading several chapters in the Bible daily, and fasting every Friday. I now commenced fasting twice a week, and arising every morning before day in order to engage in earnest prayer for that blessing. I found a considerable increase of faith immediately resulting from these efforts, especially in the morning exercises. I had clearer views of Christ, of the fullness of the atonement for sin, of the efficacy of his blood, and of the promises of the gospel. Every morning I felt that I made nearer approaches to the Saviour, and had clearer and more delightful views of his character and perfections, as well as a heartfelt realization of my absolute need of entire holiness of heart as a qualification for the discharge of every duty, and especially for the work of the ministry.

Finally, on the 1st day of December, while riding along the road in the afternoon, I fell into a train of meditation, mingled with prayer, my heart earnestly drawn out after God. Suddenly the Lord blessed my soul with the most ecstatic and exalted sensations of love and thanksgiving. I felt my heart cleansed from sin, and filled with the love of God and man. I felt that Christ was my king, my wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption; that he had entered into my heart with all his train of graces—love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, temperance, faith. I felt that my heart was continually crying:—Glory! glory! glory! I felt that God was my father, Jesus my redeemer, the Holy Ghost my sanctifier, angels my kindred, heaven my home, and glory my portion. I was unspeakably happy several days, and, thank God, I am happy now. O! that all our brethren, and especially the preachers, might seek and experience this glorious promised grace of the gospel of Christ. AN OLD PILGRIM.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

SAN MARCOS, Texas, Feb. 5, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: A letter published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in November last, written by myself, descriptive of Southwestern Texas, has waked up among the numerous readers of the ADVOCATE a spirit of inquiry about this country, both in Mississippi and Alabama, and all of these brethren and friends are due my consideration. But the correspondence has assumed such proportions as to render it very inconvenient for me to answer each letter in detail, which I would do with pleasure would my time and health permit. So, Mr. Editor, you will please give me up, humble corner in your welcome weekly visitor to this far off Southwest land. I examined my letter of November last closely, to see if I had overdrawn the picture, or put too much red on the brush, and think I did not.

My correspondents all ask similar questions: What can lands be bought at? To this I reply: it depends altogether on the locality and improvements. In the immediate vicinity of San Marcos lands sell at say from $12 to $25 per acre, where it is improved. Unimproved land is very cheap; say $1 to $2 per acre. All of these lands are rich—very unlike Mississippi or Alabama, the lands of which are spotted. Even the mountains here are very rich. To emigrants to this country I would suggest Colwell, Hays, Gonzales, and Guadalupe as best suited to Mississippi and Alabama emigrants. These counties border on the San Marcos and Guadalupe rivers, which afford vast water facilities for family use, stock and machinery. This country is filling up rapidly with a substantial population. It were best to bring labor with you, or come prepared to labor yourselves. True, there are plenty of laborers here, but mostly very unreliable — Mexicans and freedmen. We want an industrious population of white men to develop the vast resources of this great country.

Can mechanics find employment? Yes, rough work is in great demand, as there is a great scarcity of buildings for the accommodation of emigrants. Horses of the Mustang breed can be bought at from $15 to $30 per head; beef cattle, at two to two and a half cents per pound; cows and calves at $6 to $10 per head; pork worth six to seven cents per pound.

Can we save good pork? Yes; there was ice in San Marcos on the fourth of January ½ inch thick. It is a fine hog country.

How had we best move to Texas? I would suggest the land route as cheapest. Change your mules for good mares, and work them to your wagons. Good American mares are valuable here, and so of wagons. If by water, the way is by Galveston, from thence by rail to Columbus or Brenham; private conveyance or stage from thence to the San Marcos country. If you should move by land, start in September or early in October. Should this be a good season for farming, provisions will be abundant this year, as there is a full supply on hand at present. Indians? No trouble from that quarter. They are not within one hundred and fifty miles of this place. Yellow fever? The atmosphere too pure for that disease.

Methodist preachers? I never saw a finer opening for strong holy men. Schools? Educational facilities are being developed rapidly. Physicians? This is a country of remarkably fine health, but a few more of this class could live, I think.

In conclusion, I remark: we need mechanics of all kinds—turners, wheelwrights, table and bedstead makers, as well as men who will go into the cedar breaks and make rails, and haul them, and build fences round these rich lands, and break them up with the plow. We need more preachers who can deny themselves some of the luxuries of the old States, and live on small salaries, and sleep in log cabins. We have an intelligent population, but not yet fixed up.

Mr. Editor, I wish all concerned to understand that I advise no one to move to this or any country, "or even across a creek." But I do believe this a superior country for white men. Two months will suffice to make a corn crop, with ordinary seasons. Emigrants should remember that it requires money to buy provisions, even at low rates, and they should bring with them enough to supply them for one year. Bring with you rare peach and apple grafts, plums, etc.; also garden seeds, as things of this kind are greatly neglected here. Some one asks if wheat will grow here. To this I will reply, it is an uncertain crop. Sometimes the yield is heavy—twenty-five or thirty bushels per acre; other years very light. I believe, as a general rule, what will grow in south or middle Alabama will grow here.

A few words more to my friends in regard to lands. I have been requested by some of my correspondents to make selections of homes for them. To these I will say: you had best come and look for yourselves. But for the gratification of such I will make a suggestion or two. Lands lying convenient to the San Marcos river are most sought for, in consequence of the convenience to water for family use, stock, etc. There is now being offered for sale a large tract of land lying immediately on the San Marcos, four miles below the village. This is a place of rare beauty and convenience. The tract contains 1,800 acres; all of said land is rich as could be desired, and has some improvements on it, and can be bought at $5 per acre.

The place will settle twelve to fifteen families comfortably, as it has a river front of one and a half miles. The water is as pure as could be desired, and contains three excellent mill sites. Could not a company of my friends secure this place? I shall take pleasure in serving my brethren and friends in any way that will better their circumstances and promote the interest of society in this rich and beautiful country, by aiding, as much as possible, in introducing intelligent labor and a high moral sentiment into it.

I may in future say something more of this country, the West Texas Conference, etc.

J. W. BROWN.

"O PAPA!" said a little chap, the other day, as he came home from school, "I am next to head!" "Ah! and how many are in the class, Freddy?" "Two."

MILITARY ORDERS.

The following order, issued by Gen. Hancock, will have a most important bearing upon the finances of the State:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DIST., New Orleans, La., February 22, 1868.

Special Orders No. 40.

[Extract.]

1. The Auditor and Treasurer of the State of Louisiana have officially represented to the Commanding General of the Fifth Military District that "the indebtedness of the State is such that, under the present revenue laws, the debt cannot be paid;" and the Governor of the State has, in an official communication to the Commanding General, declared that the State Treasury is totally bankrupt; that the judges and all the other officers of the State cannot be paid; and that unless some remedy be applied the machinery of civil government in the State must stop. The collection of arrear taxes for four years was, by act of the Legislature, suspended until the year 1870, and the appropriation act of the State, passed on the 25th of March, 1867, to meet the current expenses of the State, expired on the 31st of December, 1867, so that no adequate provision for the current year now exists, and no payments can be made by the Treasurer. The emergency of the case is so pressing and immediate, and prompt action so indispensable to prevent anarchy and confusion and the loss of all semblance of civil law, that the Commanding General feels it his duty to use his authority for the relief of the State in this exigency. Upon the recommendation of his excellency, Gov. Baker, it is therefore ordered:

I. That from and after this day all the licenses on trades, professions and occupations, the revenues, dues and taxes, of the State of Louisiana, shall be payable and collected in United States legal tender notes. It is made the duty of the State Treasurer, and of all other persons charged with these collections, to exact payments as above.

II. The Auditor and Treasurer of the State shall be required to keep a special and separate account of all dues, taxes, funds or other public moneys, which shall be received by them hereafter from any and all collectors of taxes, or from other sources; and it shall be their duty to appropriate the same to the payments of the salaries of the judicial, executive and civil officers of the State; and to pay and discharge all the appropriations made in favor of the charitable institutions, the free schools, for the rent of the Mechanics' Institute, and for the support of the State convicts. The act of the Legislature making appropriations for the general expenses of the State ending the 31st of December, 1867, so far as the appropriations therein set forth apply to the above enumerated officers and institutions, will be adopted by the said Treasurer and Auditor, and other officers, as if the said Legislature had passed the same act providing for the year 1868, making appropriations for the objects hereinbefore specified in this order, for the sums contained in said act; provided, however, that the Treasurer of the State shall not pay any other outstanding warrants or other obligations of the State than those that are issued against appropriations for the last quarter of the year 1867, restricting himself in the payment of these last-mentioned obligations to those applicable to, and issued in favor of the officers and institutions hereinbefore referred to in this order, and for whose special benefit and protection this order provides, and for no others.

III. For the purpose of carrying out this order, without delay, the tax collectors throughout the State of Louisiana will report immediately, under oath, to the State Treasurer, the kinds and amounts of funds and moneys collected by them up to this date.

IV. For the purpose of avoiding expense throughout the State, the assessments which have been made for the year 1867 are adopted, as if the same had been made for the year 1868, and the collectors will be required to perform their duties under existing laws.

* * * * *

By command of Major Gen. Hancock:
GEO. L. HARTSUFF, A. A. G.

APPLE TOAST.—Cut six apples in four quarters each, take the core out, peel and cut them in slices; put in a saucepan an ounce of butter, then throw over the apples about two ounces of white pounded sugar and two table-spoonfuls of water; put the saucepan on the fire, let it stew quickly, toss them up, or stir with a spoon; a few minutes will do them. When tender, cut two or three slices of bread half an inch thick, put in a frying-pan two ounces of butter, put on the fire; when the butter is melted, put in your bread, which fry of a nice yellowish color; when nice and crisp take them out, place them on a dish, a little white sugar over the apples about one inch thick. Serve hot.

BISHOP McTYEIRE IN TEXAS.

Bishop McTyeire is writing some delightful letters in the Nashville Christian Advocate, giving an account of his recent travel through Texas. We extract from his No. IV the following description of a good white man's country:

We crossed the Trinity at the lower ferry, ten miles from Palestine, and now began to get glimpses of the peculiar country. The ferrying was no great job, for the boat at that season reached from shore to shore. The ferryman had only the trouble to collect his silver half-dollar on each of our vehicles. The signs were plain that Trinity, at times, is a wide and angry flood, and its bottom well-nigh impassable in the wet season, even when the water is within banks. Here grows the pecan, though the fruit is not so delicate as that of the Colorado and Guadalupe valleys. Our nooning was under live-oaks, and near a sandy stream. For the first time and last time Charlie gave the coffeepot and cups a thorough scrubbing. The little fellow astonished himself and us at the bright warns which, by virtue of sand and water, he produced from beneath such incrustations of soot and tarnish as had accumulated. The General excelled himself that day in coffee-making; all agreed it was real mahogany, and took the second round out of our clean cups.

In Carolina, in Florida, and lately in Upshur county, I had trudged through deep sand; but the depth, breadth and length of the sand-beds today were not surpassed. To the right and left are said to be productive lands, and not far off; though it takes testimony to establish this. Freestone county has a good quality of cotton and corn lands, and they are said to be healthy. We are now on a line above the yellow fever range. Homes can be bought cheaply. I was surprised at the low price and favorable terms on which a friend had got a settlement in post-oak lands, lively, and easily put under cultivation ($1 per acre, and four years to pay it.) We reached Fairfield an hour or two in the night, but Dr. Starly would not let us feel uncomfortable on that account—he was looking for us. The Doctor's contributions to the literature and science of his profession, through medical journals, have given him more than a local reputation, and I was happy to make his acquaintance. Here, too, I was privileged to meet Col. Moreland, my father's friend, late of Russell county, Alabama. He is in good position to be useful to his old neighbors, who seek a better country. If the Colonel will pardon me for laying on a willing burden, I would direct to him those seeking information of locations in Freestone and Limestone counties. These two Methodist brethren, of means and influence, will please bear in mind the pledge they are under to see that a house is built in Fairfield, the county-seat, for religious worship. We have none, and I believe other churches are no better off in this respect. Brother Gilmore embraces Fairfield in his circuit, and we advise him to give them no rest until they rise up and build.

A peculiarity of the bald prairie I had noticed in Alabama is its unsuitableness to the cotton-plant, which takes the rust and sheds off its leaves and perishes. Not so here; the best cotton—size, limbing, and fruit considered—that I saw was on the bald prairies, near Cotton Gin and [illegible]. The worm had not troubled it, and to the top the bolls were open.

The next day puts us in the prairies, and among the mosquet groves, looking like peach-orchards in an old field. Ranches of sheep and cows throw out their skirmishers. Broad-horned bullocks, upon whose neck a yoke has never come, seem to be living in vain. Cavy-ard (Sp. Caballada) is the word applied to a collection of the horse kind. The mares feed in bunches, with last spring's colts beside them; and the offspring of the year before is generally recognizable in their neighborhood. The mustang is the wild horse, creole of the prairie; tough and serviceable when tamed; getting scarce now. The horses before us, though unbroke, are not wild, and bear the owner's brand; the produce of Spanish and American stock, crossed; short-coupled and not tall. The government, recruiting its frontier cavalry, has put out bids for several hundred horses, none to be under fourteen and a half hands. Mr. M., of S., told me he liked the price, ($50 to $80, if I remember,) but out of his large cavyard, healthy, active, strong, and of sufficient age, he could not quite get in a single horse—too low.

Here we fell in with the grasshoppers—the loitering rear-guard of a host that had passed away. They are occasional visitors, and sometimes very damaging ones. Farther west we ate vegetables which had been saved by having a sheet to cover them. Some cabbages had been saved by tying up each head in a rag. Hogs, geese, turkeys, and the bird tribe, eat them, and on the Salon we saw a flock of goats skipping after them. If they eat what they caught, it is an improbable appetite.

PRODUCTIONS.

This is a subject so copious and marvelous in its character that the reader must be satisfied with general remarks, and the writer be grateful not to exhaust the credulence of the reader. It is pertinent that the curious should be exhorted to follow the example of the Queen of Sheba in regard to Solomon, go and see and hear for yourself, and say whether the half has been told you.

The grain productions of this country are mainly wheat, oats, barley, and occasionally a little rye and corn. Corn, however, is but rarely cultivated. Certain localities near water courses, having a sandy soil, make the culture of corn a possibility where the yield is respectable. In other localities, where irrigation is practicable, this grain can be successfully cultivated. But the farming community generally prefer the culture of barley as a substitute for corn.

The yield of wheat in this country is generally estimated at about from 40 to 60 bushels per acre. In a few instances I have heard of a yield of 90 bushels to the acre. This is, however, a rare success. A gentleman of pretty large observation in California told me that so abundant are the productions of that country that one good season would yield enough to sustain the country for three years. Then the country had but a limited market for her products. Soon after a brisk trade sprung up and emptied the then heavily burdened depots of their surplus grain, by shipping it to the States, and so highly is this wheat and flour appreciated in the States that the trade promises to continue. All the available shipping at San Francisco was monopolized for this trade, so that Oregon was cut off from participating in it. She will have to get up shipping of her own in self-defense. I have not learned what is the usual yield of barley; but more than wheat, I presume. And when there is a demand for it the farmer is richly repaid for his toil in raising it.

Oats are mainly used as hay. They are mowed before they are quite ripe. They are then boiled, as timothy is frequently done in this country. They are an excellent food for cattle or horses. They will subsist well upon oats without any thing else when not used hard. When put to hard service they usually give them some barley to impart additional strength; but this treatment is only given to such as are kept for regular service. The stock not used graze on the growing grasses and wild oats, and other volunteer grains of the country, while it is green, and then, when it is cured, upon the ground.

This leads me to remark that the vegetation of this country gets its growth during what is usually styled the rainy season, which lasts from about the middle of November to the middle of May, and sometimes to June; or, at least, it gets such a start in its growth that the remaining moisture of the ground conducts it to maturity. The heat of the sun, in the absence of rain or dew, soon dries up the grass and the stalks of the grain, until every thing, save trees and some flourishing weeds, seems utterly dried up and dead. From appearances you would readily suppose that the stock of the country must suffer sadly. But you will presently perceive that your sympathies are misplaced, instead of a decline in flesh, they are evidently fattening. The cause of this is, that every thing has simply cured upon ground and is excellent food, and remains so until the rains of the next fall rot the straw and the grass that may be left. The fact, then, that there is no rain during these many months is a blessing to the country. When we speak of the rainy season, it is not to be supposed that it rains all the time of this season. There are often pleasant days that intervene between the rains; and again, the rains are often at night, and the succeeding day a pleasant one.

The next products we shall notice are the fruits of the country.

You may guess at my appreciation of these when I tell you, that it had been about three years since we had had a fruit year in Kentucky; that when I walked on the streets of San Francisco, and saw long rows of fruit stands, presenting to the eye boxes of the richest-looking grapes, large piles of yellow-looking pears, large, soft, and tempting; boxes of plums of huge dimensions; peaches, yellow and red, soft and juicy; apples, of every size and color—I could not but feel the sentiment, "Paradise Regained." That this should have been forbidden fruit at that time would have been a trying case; but it was not. "Of all them mayest freely eat," was a welcome license. I considered it not the time for self-denial, and soon realized the glory of the land.

This exhibition of fruits is a fair representation of the land. The fruit is always abundant, and of greater variety than I have seen in any other country. Again, it is more perfect than that of any other country, save, in some particulars, that of Oregon. The curculio, the insect that deposits its eggs in young fruit, and produces the worm that destroys it, is not in the country. I did not find a single instance of fruit thus corrupted.

The grape is common to the whole country. But its favorite climate and soil appears to be the southern end of the State. More marvelous things are said of the grape about Los Angelos than any other portion of which I have heard. My modesty rather declines to repeat the statements which have been made to me as to the number of pounds a single bunch of grapes is said to weigh; suffice it to say that the statement places it above the teens. How far into the mountain regions the grape will flourish I am not informed; but a very cool summer seems not friendly to the grape. There is in California the richest variety, not only of grapes, but of fruits generally. And we may remark of vegetables that they are larger and more perfect than we have found elsewhere. The cabbage, beets, Irish potatoes, onions, and squashes are of unusual size and the finest flavor.

But time would fail me to tell of the enormous mineral wealth of this country—so varied in kind, so abundant in quantity—of the imposingly grand and sublime scenery of the country which a clear day presents. What think you of seeing objects distinct and well-defined at the distance of one hundred and fifty miles? Amidst scenes of this imposing character, I remarked to a traveling companion that if ideas derived from familiarity with sublime scenery make men eloquent, that man that could not be eloquent amid the upper waters of the Sacramento River ought to be choked down as unbearable.

INORDINATE SELF-PLEASING. — The London Watchman, August 28th, comes to us with the annual address of the British Wesleyan Societies in Great Britain, signed by John Bedford, president, John Farrar, secretary. One of its paragraphs is as follows:

An inordinate disposition to self-pleasing is an observable characteristic of the age. The material progress of society, and the daily increasing facilities which that progress affords for obtaining individual gratification and enjoyment, have created and developed this temper in the public mind. We earnestly caution you against it. The most innocent delights become mischievous when they become absorbing. Indulgence in earthly pleasure, of whatever kind, feeds its own strength and may easily pass into the dominant and irresistible passion. Take heed that a subtile love of things seen does not supplant in your spiritual sympathies and aspirations. While you are alive to all that is noble and beautiful both in nature and art, be wise enough not to forget that the world and the most glorious things in it will, by and by, be dissolved, and that the object of Christian faith alone will remain forever. Hold the reins of the flesh and the spirit alike in the strong hand of a humble and resolved consecration of yourself to Christ. Abstain from all such amusements, as if not demonstrably evil, are only questionably good. Be jealous of whatever might lead you to trifle with the sanctity of the Lord's day, or might in any way disqualify you for the private or public duties of your Christian profession. Indolence, sloth, luxury, and inordinate earthly affection in all its forms, are fatal to the reality of a life of faith in Christ. Let an intelligent and Christian self-denial enter into the substance of your daily conduct. Remember, if any man will be Christ's disciple he must deny himself and take up his cross daily, and follow him.

CHICKEN SALAD.—Take two well-boiled chickens, and, when cold, cut into small pieces, removing the skin and bone. Mix with this cut chicken four times as much cut celery (or lettuce heads and celery mixed) as you have chicken. Season with salt and pepper to your taste. Take the yolks of eight hard-boiled eggs, and mash them to a paste with the back of a spoon, using a few table-spoonfuls of cold water to soften them. To this add a little salt, four table-spoonfuls of made mustard, four table-spoonfuls of melted butter, and six spoonfuls of salad oil, with eight table-spoonfuls vinegar. Rub these together until they are quite smooth. Half an hour before salad is sent to table, mix this dressing thoroughly with the chicken and celery.—Dixie Cookery.

"Have you Enough of it Now, Master John?"

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 28, 1868.

In that sad and bloody past which immediately followed the captivity of Charles I, after the army of Montrose had been disbanded, and the Presbyterians of Scotland had obtained temporary control of that distracted country, there were daily exhibited scenes of cruelty and bloodshed rarely equaled in any civilized land. During this period of wholesale murder the clergy were distinguished for their relentless cruelty; often when the soldiery, weary of slaughter, were disposed to spare, they cried out for the execution of the Philistines, and denounced any evidence of lenity as an act of backsliding and defection, and a sin against God, who, according to them, required the utter extermination of the wicked. It was on the occasion of a most sanguinary execution of the royalists, which was participated in and encouraged by one of these preachers, that a military officer, seeing this fanatical priest, John Neavins by name, return from the place of slaughter with his shoes dabbled in the blood of the victims, asked him the question at the head of this article, "Have you enough of it now, Master John?" But Master John and his clerical brethren had not enough of it; they continued to press on the confiscations, the burnings, and the executions even after the politicians and the soldiery, disgusted and alarmed at the consequences, were disposed to relax the rigor of the persecution. Nor did they abate their fiery zeal and fanatical cruelty until the tide was turned, Charles II was crowned, and the Royalists and Episcopalians were again in power. Then the poisoned chalice was commended to their own lips, and they in their turn were subjected to a persecution even more cruel and relentless than their own.

Thus has it always been when the ministers of the gospel have forsaken their legitimate calling to mingle in the strife of politics. Every alliance between church and State has produced evil, only evil, and that continually. So thoroughly were the fathers of the republic convinced of this, that when they came to frame a constitution they were careful to provide against any alliance or connection between the two.

The success of the experiment demonstrated its wisdom; politics was freed from the spirit of intolerance and persecution which invariably spring from religious bigotry, and the church was purer and more efficient for this entire separation from civil affairs.

But the abolition movement commenced. Feeble at first, it would soon have died out entirely; but the church seized upon it, and soon it became a disturbing element in all her councils. Her preachers, weary of the tame subjects of the incarnation, the crucifixion, and the ascension, laid aside these state themes to entertain their hearers with the fancied wrongs of the slave: wrongs which Christ, Peter and Paul had failed to see. The inevitable consequence soon followed. Many of the churches formally separated.

But these crusaders were not yet satisfied. The church, at least in the North, was purged of the deadly sin, but the State still recognized as lawful this "sum of all villainies." Hence almost every Northern preacher became a politician, and what the professed politician, with ribald jest and obscene illustration, taught from the stump, the preacher, with all the solemnity and authority of God's messenger to men, proclaimed from the pulpit. Sharpe's rifles were distributed by hands fresh from the service of the Eucharist, and a crusade of blood and murder was preached from lips that claimed to have been touched as with a live coal from heaven's own altar.

And thus these apostles of peace and good will encouraged and fostered strife and bitterness between brethren, until the quarrel culminated in a civil war the most dreadful the world has ever known. But protracted as the struggle was, it closed at last. Five hundred thousand men perished in battle or from disease and wounds during the conflict; a hundred thousand were left maimed and crippled for life; a thousand millions of property was destroyed; a territory half as large as all Europe was desolated, and five millions of people, including the aged and the minor, the widow and the orphan, once prosperous and happy, were reduced almost to beggary. Gentlemen of the clergy, had you not enough of it then?

A few of you seemed for a moment to think so. Henry Ward Beecher, who had perhaps done as much as any other man to stir up the strife, apparently appalled at the results of his teachings, spoke for a time the words of peace and reconciliation. But the great mass knew no relenting, and even he soon returned to his old ways.

During the war the burden of their sermons and of all the resolutions of their church meetings was, "the church must sustain the government," forgetting that the church, as an organization, had nothing whatever to do with the government, and that its great Head had said, "My kingdom is not of this world." But now "the government" seemed divided. The President showed a strong disposition to do all in his power to heal the wounds inflicted by the bitter strife, to re-establish harmony and fraternal feeling, and to treat the South with some degree of justice, if not of generosity. The Congress, however, determined to continue the war after the fighting had ceased.

Strange to say, these ministers of the gospel of peace sided with the Congress, and soon their pulpits rang with denunciations of the Executive, and declarations that it was now the duty of the church to sustain and support Congress. And the church did support Congress, and mainly through that support a series of measures have been planned and executed that have thoroughly completed the ruin the war had commenced. We need not speak of the utter prostration of business; of the once fertile fields abandoned to weeds and briers; of the hundreds who have been driven into exile; of the tens of thousands who would follow as the shortest way to escape oppression if they had the means; of the gloom—the hopeless despair—that has settled down upon so many hearts and unnerved so many arms; of the governments of ten States from which the virtuous and intelligent have been carefully excluded, that they might be handed over to the ignorant, the brutal and the depraved; nor of the national Constitution openly trampled upon and shamelessly disregarded—all this concerns mainly the white man, and his fate is not supposed to be worthy of the consideration of these reverend gentlemen. But we ask their attention to the condition of their especial favorites, the negroes, as described by one who had the best opportunities of knowing the real condition to which they had been brought by the intermeddling of their self-styled friends. We copy from a letter to the New Orleans Times, written from a plantation in this parish. Speaking of the negroes on this plantation, the writer says: "The marriage tie which, under the old system, the planters found it so much to their interest to encourage and preserve, is utterly disregarded, and every cabin becomes a bawdy house. Family ties and affections appear to be nearly obliterated. There is no longer the large increase and prolificness which characterized this race under the old system. On this plantation, where there used to be a yearly increase of ten per cent. there has been but one child which has lived three months, and the young ones who were alive then have since all died off * * * * * * * * * Their medical system partakes of the grossest superstitions. There is no efficacy in the medicine itself, but it depends on God, or the devil, with whom they imagine there is a fearful struggle over the unfortunate patient. * * * * * * * Their religion is the most wretched, unmeaning, besotted and demoral[illegible] of Christianity,

This is a sad picture indeed, but we know that it is not an exaggerated one. The startling fact pressing itself upon us with tremendous force, that at the very time when the absolute control of the government is being placed in the hands of these people, and they are given the power to regulate our destinies and their own, they are fast sinking into barbarism. We know that this unfortunate race is every day descending into lower depths of ignorance, destitution and crime. Our jails and penitentiaries are already crowded with them, and the number is daily increasing. Thousands of them, unable to find work or unwilling to perform it, are flocking to the towns without clothing, without food, and without the means of obtaining either. There squatting in miserable hovels, they live nobody knows how, and die nobody cares when.

Such are some of the bitter fruits of the adulterous union of church and State. And in view of them we would ask these political preachers again, in the name of God and humanity, Gentlemen, have you enough of it now? If not, go on; still preach the gospel of hate and the religion of revenge; but remember that for all these things you shall be brought into judgment. The persecution of Argyle and John Neavins was soon followed by that of Lauderdale and James Sharpe. You tell us that we have wronged the negro, and that God is now punishing us for our sins. If so, we would humbly bow beneath the chastening rod, and pray that we may be purified by our affliction. But did it never occur to any of you that possibly you might be mistaken? Did you never think that possibly, instead of being philanthropists, who have conferred upon the negro an inestimable blessing, you were really wicked intermeddlers with what you did not understand; and that in suddenly and violently emancipating him, you had committed a great crime, the consequences of which it will take fifty years of toil and sorrow and suffering to recover from? Oh, if it should be so, what a fearful responsibility is yours!

If you are indeed responsible for all these poor creatures who have perished, and must yet perish, from disease, and want, and crime, what a reckoning will you be called to meet! Nor is this all. The unfaithfulness of the minister always affects injuriously the cause of religion. Already the people are awakening from the frenzied dream into which your teachings have plunged them. Already they are beginning to see that while pretending to be followers of the meek and lowly Saviour, you have been led away by the lust of worldly power, and have deceived and betrayed them. Well for you if many of them do not also conclude that religion itself is a cheat and a snare. Well for you if, not content with despising the priest, they come not also to despise the altar.

ROOT-GRAFTED TREES.—There is a growing feeling that much of the trouble with young orchards in the West is due to the manner of propagation, and one of the Western Horticultural Societies has published a warning against root-grafted trees. The wisdom of this depends entirely upon what is meant by root-grafted trees. If it is intended as a protest against the practice of attaching a fragment of a root to a scion, and trying to make a tree of it, we in the main agree with it. If, on the other hand, it is intended to include those trees formed by grafting upon the collar of a seedling stock, we must dissent. Both reason and practice teach that trees grown in this way are as good as those produced in any other manner.—American Agriculturist.

To SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

REV. C. K. MARSHALL, D. D., will preach in the Felicity street church on Sabbath morning next, at 11 o'clock.

THE TEXAS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.—This admirable paper gives new evidence of its unwasted vitality. It is replumed, and appears in quarto form. It is a fit organ for the five Texas Conferences, worthy of them, as they are of it. There could be no greater folly than to divide the Texas patronage among several papers; it must result in a general failure. The Church in Texas is abundantly able to sustain one first-rate Advocate, such as the one it now publishes, and the many sacrifices which have already been made to this end should command the admiration of the whole Southern Methodist Church.

RADICAL PURPOSES.

The article below is from the Independent of New York. This paper gives the key-note to the Radical tune. It is the head of those baleful streams which have poured from New England and the "Beecher family" over the country. The policy here urged upon Congress has found expression in the impeachment action. It shows that, in advance of any specific act of the President, the Radical party had determined to get rid of him, as an inconvenient obstacle to the November elections. Between the "two millstones" it feared being ground to powder, and so must destroy the upper or the nether.

To this article might be added the entire religious press of the Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Baptists and Methodists throughout the North. They all, with scarcely an exception, denounce the President and praise Congress. The bondholders, the twenty-five hundred million men, stand squarely up to Mr. Stanton and Gen. Grant. Army officers of high repute say that, generally, army officials are not with the Radical movement; but we see no considerable exception to the course of Grant and Sherman. A few, such as Gen. Hancock and Mr. Thomas, have spoken out, but not enough of them to base any expectation of support to the President. Meanwhile sentries are walking to and fro before the War Department, and keep out the private secretary of Mr. Johnson, but admit those of Gen. Grant.

The impeachment of the President will proceed swiftly, and not, as we thought last week, with dilatory steps. He will be set aside before the South is reconstructed. The hope of rescue, either for the President or the Constitution, we think to be equally vain. How this utter subversion of the theory and spirit of the constitutional government can be arrested is the problem which, doubtless, occupies every true lover of his country at the North, whose good sense has not given way under an intense hatred of the South, or that stronger passion, thirst for gold. Certainly no cool man, whatever his antecedents, can fail to see that the government of the Congress of 1776 is about to go down under that of the Congress of 1868—that a despotism of the Congressional caucus is sustained by prominent officers of the Federal army and the bondholders, in its purpose to seize upon the army and the navy, as well as the treasury, and so administer in perpetuity this government.

The open corruption which pervades the State, the Church and society throughout the Northern States has nearly destroyed, in the public mind, all respect for the great principles which are embodied in the instrument called the Constitution of the United States. This is a harsh judgment, seemingly, but if those that "call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter," can be reckoned as fatally devoid of moral force, then those people are no longer capable of that high appreciation of constitutional law necessary to the existence of this Republic.

Led on by the Republican party, the white men of this country have lost their liberties in the act of giving freedom to the negro. This dire result cannot be changed without a convulsion of the whole framework of society, which, beginning at the North, will there remain and consume, with the fierce raging of a civil war, all power and substance that has been accumulated and built up during the past century. In this conflict the South will have neither wish nor ability to share.

The recent war was, we believe, an instinctive perception of this present result, and a resistance to it upon the part of the Southern States. They properly enough spent the last dollar and the last man to avert what they believed to be certain social and political ruin. "Having done all," they now stand and prayerfully await that deliverance which God can alone bring. We do not say that the people will very speedily assert their rightful liberties. The people, as a body, are very helpless, and are usually slow either to ascertain or to redress grievances. They easily become the victims of designing men, who may be at any time in power. We think that the President's immense respect for the innate force of popular virtue and wisdom is absurd, and not sustained by history, for history shows that it is easy for any nation to lose its liberties, but a matter of exceeding difficulty to regain them.

What next? Is Alabama to come back without a new and equal constitution? Never! Let her rather be kept out till doomsday. If Alabama stays at home from the polls, Alabama must stay at home from Congress. We devoutly pray that the halls of the capitol may never echo to the tread of an Alabamian representative till he goes there to represent the political equality of white men and black. No more slave States! No more rebel aristocracies! No more "white men's" oligarchies! Alabama must be a province governed by the sword until she can consent to be a State governed by justice.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The vote shows the formidable and defiant opposition which the whole South means to make against the Congressional or any other just plan of reconstruction. This opposition, if not conquered and disarmed, boldly and promptly, threatens the safety of the nation at the next Presidential election. The prime author of the reanimated rebellion in the South is Andrew Johnson. It is solely through his leadership that the conspirators of the Confederacy are still conniving against the Republic. Defying Congress himself, he stimulates the rebels to defy it. Breaking the law himself, he invites the Southern people to become a banditti of anarchists. Wielding the power of one-third of the government, and doubling this power by leaguing himself with the enemies of the Union, he is proved by the Alabama election to be more of a governing force in the South to-day than the entire Congress, with the help of the entire army, has known how to become. Left to himself, the President will grow every day stronger. In fact, he may yet achieve the absolute and total route of Congress. Holding the Democratic party of the North in one hand, and the rebel majority of the South in the other, he may yet find a sudden chance to fling these weights, like two millstones, to crush the Congress rival plan of reconstruction, and destroy it. The only safety is in his immediate impeachment. Heretofore, it was said, "Why impeach him? He cannot do any harm. He is powerless." But the Alabama election shows that Andrew Johnson is the chief power of the government in the work of reconstruction. Powerless? Who is more powerful? He has thus far signally defeated Congress in reconstructing the Union. Does not this show power enough? If he had more power he would destroy us utterly! Let the scepter be smitten out of his hand! The public safety demands it. A speedy restoration of the Union cannot be effected without it. Common sense dictates it. Justice waits for it.

There has been a futile expectation that Congress would succeed in over-ruling the President. This is impossible. The President's coworkers are too many; his opportunity is too stupendous; his influence is too universal; his power is too regal. Congress cannot reconstruct the Union while Andrew Johnson sits in the Presidential chair. If Congress expects to accomplish its work it must get rid of its hindrance. The President destroys by night what Congress builds by day. There is but one remedy—put him out of the way! The American people hold Congress responsible for a just, safe, and speedy restoration of the Union. If Congress fails to achieve this, and achieve it soon, shame and dishonor shall attach to its members and its history. But it never can be achieved while Andrew Johnson, wielding one-third of the government as his destroying weapon, stands fighting against it, as last week in Alabama. Wisdom, firmness, and promptness join their three voices in crying, Off with his head!—Independent.

NEW BOOKS.—The agent, Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, has laid upon our table The Work of Christ, by Bishop Marvin, a most admirable treatise upon the extent of the atonement, a work which we have heretofore noticed at length. Also, Azile, by Mrs. T. H. Cross; both published by A. H. Redford, agent, Nashville, Tennessee, 1868.

RESTITUTION.

The duty of restitution, so far as possible, is clear as between man and man. With the penitent it is a case of conscience so imperative that peace with God cannot be secured until it is attended to. The fruits of theft, extortion, and false swearing must be restored to the rightful possessor. It is such an essential part of repentance that no one can think of acceptance with his Maker without it. The uttermost farthing is demanded, or at least an acknowledgment of the wrong, and its reparation to the extent of ability.

The principle applies not to money or property only, but to every conceivable injury. Any damage to our neighbor calls for reparation, whether in character, in spiritual welfare, or in body or estate. Until this obligation is conceded and met it is supposed there is an insuperable barrier to pardon. There can be no reconciliation, no comfort in religion so long as these claims are neglected or resisted. Restitution confronts the sinner in his first approach to "the throne of grace," and there is no mercy for him until he consents to meet the issue candidly, and to discharge the debt. This is no more than honesty, and God will not accept and bless a dishonest soul.

In the direct relations which we sustain to God there is room for the exhibition of repentance, in the restitution which is due. When the whole is taken into account there is, of course, a moral bankruptcy. As transgressors of the law there is no deliverance but through pardon. The debt is so great and overwhelming that mercy, through an atoning sacrifice, can alone save from ruin. And yet, in some aspects of the subject, the obligation to undo wrong, to counteract evils, and to restore what has been withheld, evidently exists. God's claims upon us begin as soon as there is accountability, and these extend to the substantial services which we might have rendered.

These have been withheld until we come at last to be received into his favor. If you have robbed your neighbor there is no hope until restitution is made. How stands the matter in reference to our robbery of God? If, according to the Jewish law, a tenth is due year by year, how much is the amount in principal and interest to date? Leaving out other things, there is a definite portion of our substance due to God. How much we need not determine, but it is something. After many years we knock at mercy's door, and in the full surrender of ourselves, is there no demand made for what has been kept back from God? What we have taken wrongfully from man must be restored, but God's property must be retained. Suppose it was your duty to give fifty dollars a year to the poor, or to the spread of the gospel. At the end of twenty years you wake up and begin to lead a new life, and to be a Christian in earnest. Fifty dollars a year for twenty years, and as legitimately due to God as a note for that amount given to a neighbor, would be due to him. God has been kept out of his own, he has been wronged and defranded to this extent. In this, as in other sins, there is forgiveness, but we should suppose not where there is no recognition of the wrong, and no disposition to repair it.

A principle which so evidently applies, in our relations with one another, may be applicable in our relations with God. What the measure of every Christian's duty is, bears some proportion to the consecration which he professes. From conversion he at least assumes to do all he can; to give all he can. He could scarcely enter into the kingdom with a distinct reservation of this degree of devotion. It may not take the specific shape of a certain piece of land given or sold, and yet a "part of the price" may be kept back, with as much guilt as in the offering of Ananias and Sapphira. The principle and the debt involved are recognized in our devotion to Christ.

Our wrong to God, in this particular, must be estimated by the extent of our failure to reach the mark of Christian giving. Have we fallen short by a half, or a third? Is it ten, twenty, or fifty dollars less than we ought to have contributed? And for how many years has this deficiency been running, and to what accumulation has it reached at length? It comes to pass that the believer is averse to the conviction that he has come short in this duty. Like other sins, repentance is needed; he must draw nigh to God and renew the covenant. There is pardon for the broken spirit; but what about the tithes withheld? Does God forgive this sin, and ask no restitution? The neighbor must be paid off, if it be possible, but are God's claims cancelled without any reference to the sum of which He has been robbed? If the recognition of this guilt comes, and there is nothing to restore, a frank forgiveness supposes the recognition of the claim.

Special vows may bring us under solemn obligations to God. As, in the instance of Ananias and Sapphira, the money became God's, when it was avowedly devoted to religious purposes. Doubtless there are amongst Christians often "promises to pay," of this description, more specific, and not embraced in the general law of consecration to Christ. There is a sacredness in these claims which the Bible instances, to which we have just alluded, render impressive. How much of this description of assets may be afloat in the world we do not know. But a good deal there doubtless is, locked up in the secret history and purposes of many, and laid away among the papers and records of benevolent societies and churches. Whatever is thus promised certainly belongs to God. Time does not cancel the obligation, and there is no prescription which can be pleaded. *

HONDURAS, MEXICO, AND BRAZIL.

Last week we had the pleasure of seeing in our office, at the same time, two returned Southern gentlemen, who had been seeking a better country, one from Honduras, the other from Mexico. Both were men of enterprise, good sense and high character. Of their report this is the essence: Mexico has a delightful climate, good soil, and many advantages physical, but is full of violence, politically hopeless, and to Americans unendurable.

Honduras presents an excellent government. It is a country of law. One feels delightfully secure in it. There is no room there for bowie knives or bluster, no spitting in church, or talking in the court house. The mother country keeps all public offices in her own hands. Much of the food, such as flour and groceries, are imported from the United States. It is easy to spend all you have there, and it is difficult to find an employment at which one can make money. The English merchants are not disposed to employ American youths as clerks. They incline strongly to their own people. Quite a number of merchants are mulattoes, quadroons, and some of them are very shrewd, well educated men. There is absolutely there no distinction as to color. The wife of the Wesleyan minister kisses a colored sister upon meeting; colored men are in the governor's privy council. On the grand jury there was but one really white man, and a considerable proportion of it was pure black. The opinion was expressed, in this connection, that if the Radicals had this country all their own way for fifty years there would not be as perfect equality of color as there is now at Belize. Sugar cane grows finely, and can be made very profitable. Grass does not grow from the density of the shade upon the rich lands. There is scarcely a churn in the colony. Negroes there are like those here, strikingly so, considering they have never seen each other. The labor question there is as much of a problem as here. Fish are plenty, and plantains grow in abundance; with these the negro is quite independent. You must hire one for each distinct service; it is impossible to get a servant of all work. They are quite expert at tying vines, and in rude contrivances of their own for cultivating land, but awkward in the use of plows, hoes, and other implements—far behind our field-hands. In a word, they come nearer having it all their own way there than in any other country with which our friend is acquainted. The sand flies and the bottle fly are a serious and endless plague. Nothing but a calico bar will keep out the sand fly. It annoys by night and day, works its way under the sheets, and bites the children. The bottle fly leaves a large blotch and swells the face—"almost puts your eyes out." Many were there anxious to return, but had not the means; and of those who came back on the last steamer, but five out of thirty could pay passage money. The rest were brought upon pledged watches, or promises to get the money of friends upon arrival here. Both gentlemen said, in conclusion, "that no place out of the United States will suit a United States man." It is proper to state that the party from Honduras had been in the country from August until December, and that his observation had been confined entirely to the coast.

As to Brazil, we advise our friends to wait until those who have gone out have been there long enough to make one crop; then hear their testimony as to the country. If one gets there he will be apt to stay from sheer inability to get back.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

A letter from the worthy president, the Rev. C. B. Stuart, says: "Our spring session opened on the 13th of February. Up to this time we have fifty scholars and sixteen boarders—a good school, considering the condition of things. We shall keep all the machinery at work and be ready for increased numbers when the good Lord vouchsafes us a propitious season. There is a considerable disposition among our people to educate their children, and they have made sacrifices to this end."

Relief of the Publishing House.

We add this week to the list of those who have responded to the sixty dollar proposition of the book agent, Rev. A. R. Winfield, Ouachita Conference.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

From Mr. George Ellis' bookstore, opposite the post office, New Levee street:

Randolph Honor, by the author of Ingenisco. New York: Richardson & Co., 14 Bond street, 1868. 1 mo. This is a well woven tale of the war period. Its scene is laid on the west of the Mississippi, and includes the campaigns in Arkansas and Missouri. It is one of the best of that class of works that are intended to commemorate and to aid the world in realizing the great events which marked the history of the conflict of the States.

From L. Scott & Co., 140 Fulton street, New York:

Edinburg Review, January, 1868. Contents: Gaehard's Don Carlos and Philip II, Oysters and Oyster Fisheries, Angou, Tyndal's Lectures on Sound, Liberal Education in England, Memoirs of Sir Philip Francis, De Fezenzac's Recollections of the Grand Army, Two per Cent, The Queen's Highland Journal.

From J. A. Gresham, 92 Camp street:

The Riverside Magazine for March.

OBITUARIES.

Died, in the faith, on the morning of the 19th of February, Mrs. FANNY BRESLEY, wife of Dr. J. P. Beesley, of the Island Ouachita parish, Louisiana.

She was born in 1838, and was married on the 4th of October, 1860. Thus is told the brief story—the sad record made.

Sister B.'s illness, of alternate hope and gloom, was long, lingering, and exceedingly painful. But we, who so anxiously watched the ebbing life, could realize the goodness and mercy of God to us and to her even in these months of suffering—the fulfillment of precious promises to the trusting heart. Had her sickness been less painful, we doubtless would not possess the present assurance of a happy transit.

During the first few weeks of her sickness she was much troubled about her religious condition, being strangely impressed that she would never recover.

The writer was called early to her bedside. She conversed very freely and fully, seemingly not so much in fear of the future as a settled sadness and regret of the past. She professed religion in early life, but had neglected the next great duty, that of joining the church. This was a source of deep sorrow.

Anxious to repair the past and do her whole duty, about five weeks before her death she was baptized and received into the church. Her remaining days were evidently much soothed by this public avowal of her faith. With a trusting heart she seemed now only to await her change.

I was with her the day before her death

In answer to my inquiry she expressed readiness to go—a perfect submission to God's will. The only desire for longer life was placed upon the only legitimate grounds, "for the good of others, and God's glory."

She was the first to perceive the final change, early in the evening, and remarked to her husband, "I shall die before morning." Very calmly and serenely did she talk of death. His sting was removed. The grave, in her simple trust, lost its victory. She conversed placidly about her sweet unconscious babe, giving minute instructions, kind messages, and a cheerful farewell to all. She winningly bade her husband stay his tears and moderate his grief. "It will do no good. I am going home. Meet me in heaven."

The dark night passed on, but earthly day came to her no more. Her eyes had closed to death, and had opened on the sunlight of "fairer worlds".

In all the relations of life sister B. was the true, the pure, the noble woman. She was singularly sweet in her manners, adding, as it were, to the native charm of her modesty, and increasing, if possible, the admiration of her friends for her intellectual and moral worth.

She was strong in her attachments, unselfish in her motives, and devoted in her life. A large circle of friends are left to mourn her early departure. J. T. D.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

DISTRICT MEETING.

Macon district meeting, Mobile Conference, will be held at Macon, Mississippi, April 16th to 19th.

All itinerant and local preachers, and all the official members of the Quarterly Conferences, are members of the district meeting, and are earnestly requested to attend. The preachers in the district will please raise their bishop's collections, if possible, and bring it up to Macon with them. Bishop Wightman has promised to be with us. S. H. Cox, P. E.
